EUCHARIST CONGRESS OPENING

MONTREAL, Sept. 6.—Montreal, filled with priests and Catholic laymen, here for the Eucharistic Congress, is agitated today over an attack on Protestantism delivered by the Rev. Bernard Vaughan, S. J., of London. Father Vaughan is probably the best-known priest in the English-speaking world. In a lecture to which the public had been invited and which was attended by many of the delegates to the congress the attack was delivered.

"Protestantism is dying out," said the priest, "and it will not be long before the last vestige of it has disappeared. If Protestants wish to conserve their religion they must work diligently to stiffish race suicide among their own people."

Archbishop Bruchesi of Montreal has also created unusual interest with a lecture on "Montreal, the Rome of the new world," which has revived discussion about Montreal as the home of the Holy See should Rome eventually become untenable.

The rainy weather of the last few days has marred the decorations for the congress and hindered delegates' sight-seeing.

The congress will be formally started with the magnificent reception to Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, the papal legate, tonight in Sherbrooke St. Jesuits Hall, where there will be assembled some of the foremost churchmen of the world. This reception a spectacle the like of which has never been seen in Canada or probably all America—among the events of the six-day progress ranks second only to the procession through the city's streets next Sunday when the host will be borne before an army of the devout. Among those taking important parts in the event are Archbishop Diomon of St. Louis and Archbishop O'Connell of Boston.

Special Chapel Built.

Special services will be held today in the special chapel which Mayor Gaudet had constructed. The attitude of the British authorities is of particular interest in view of England's stand in 1908, when the congress was held in London. Then the Premier forbade the carrying of the Host through the streets on the grounds that it would cause a hostile demonstration.

It is noteworthy, however, that Cardinal Vannutelli was received cordially in England on his way here in spite of a statute forbidding the entrance into Great Britain of papal legates. He was the first of the rank to enter the island in 300 years. In the plans for the celebration here, accommodations have been reserved at all important events for British officials.

Laurier in Cortege.

In the procession to be made to Mount Royal and the pontifical mass at Notre Dame places will be kept for Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Premier, and the members of his ministry; as well as the Premiers of the various provinces, Canadian judges and mayors.

The congress is divided into several sections, some of which the proceedings will be conducted in Latin. The others will be conducted in French or English. The chief discourses of the congress are to be delivered by Cardinal Vannutelli, Mgr. Bruchesi, Cardinal Gibbons, Cardinal Logue, Archbishop Farley, Archbishop Glennon, the Rev. Father Vaughan of London, Mgr. Bourne, the Abbe Lecoigne, the Rev. T. J. Campbell, S. J., the Rev. H. Canning of Toronto, the Rev. A. P. Doyle, C. S. P., of the Apostolic Mission House, Washington; the Rev. E. S. Fitzgerald, Holyoke, Mass.; the Rev. Dr. John J. McCoy, of Worcester, Mass.; the Very Rev. J. Conaughan, C. S. C., President Notre Dame University; the Rev. James Coyle of Taunton, Mass.; the Very Rev. Daniel Hand of Toronto and others.

Work?

One of the greatest problems of the day is in bringing the man who wants to work into contact with the man who wishes to engage him.

This applies also to women. Do you want work? Then tell your story so that some employer may engage you.

Are you an employer? Then advertise for the help you need. The classified department works both ways.

4 MEN SAVED FROM YACHT AS IT GOES DOWN

NEWBURYPORT, Sept. 6.—Four men were rescued from the sloop yacht Peggy by the crew of the Knubb's Beach life-saving station just before it went down on Emerson rock, near Knubb's Beach, shortly before noon today.

The rescued are Anton Leverone, Arthur A. Andrews, Melvin Shaff, an instructor at the Institute of Technology, and Philip W. Jacobs, a Boston lawyer.

The Peggy hails from Marblehead and was flying the pennant of a Boston yacht club. It is thirty-six feet long and was built seven years ago.

Philip Jacobs owned the yacht. He invited Leverone, Andrews and Shaff for a yachting cruise with him. The party was bound for Marblehead from Portsmouth.

Jacobs started to take in the main sail and had the job about completed when the yacht hit Emerson rock, which stove a hole in the bottom, causing the water to flow into the cabin.

Captain Frank Stevens of the Knubb's Beach life-saving station saw the yacht after it struck the rock. Later he saw the men climbing up the mast. He ordered his men to man the lifeboats.

Arriving at the yacht, the life saving crew found the men exhausted. Andrews, Shaff and Leverone were pulled into the boat. Jacobs made a jump for the boat, missed and fell into the water. He was being swept away by the heavy sea. After much difficulty he was rescued by one of the members of the life saving crew, who caught him by the hair and hauled him into the boat.

MOISSANT REACHES LONDON FROM PARIS

LONDON, Sept. 6.—John B. Moissant this afternoon reached Crystal Palace at 5:25 o'clock, completing his flight from Paris with a passenger.

When he reached the Crystal Palace he circled the immense building eight times, then pointing his machine toward the south, he traveled another mile before he found a suitable place to alight.

Though he left Paris three weeks ago to-day Moissant broke a record on the passage, being the first to cross the English channel with a passenger. He flew without difficulty from hails, a Parisian suburb, to Calais and across the channel. Stamps and bad luck with no Blériot monoplane kept him three weeks trying to reach London from the channel coast. He was compelled to stop half a dozen times, and finally set out from Seven Oaks, twenty-two miles from London. After five miles he was compelled to alight and descend, but soon continued with the passenger, his mechanic, Albert Fluery.

RALLY TO-NIGHT FOR JOSEPH O'CONNELL

A rally in the interest of Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell will be held this evening in the Library Building, Norfolk and Washington streets, Codman square, Dorchester. It will be Congressman O'Connell's first appearance in the campaign in Ward 24. Among the speakers will be Congressman O'Connell, Owen A. Cummings, Louis K. Foley and several of the prominent Democratic leaders in the Dorchester district.

AMERICAN WRITER TAKES RIDE IN AIR

By JOSEPH P. TOYE.

Boston American Staff Reporter at the Atlantic Aviation Field.

Charles Foster Willard, Boston's own aviator, late yesterday afternoon took me for a ride in his Curtiss biplane "Banshee," over the course at Atlantic. We covered a distance of three and one-half miles at nearly a mile-a-minute clip, or, to be exact, in three minutes, fifty seven and two-fifths seconds.

You ask: "Well, how does it feel to ride in an aeroplane, anyway?"

I felt as if I were sitting high up in the air in a chair while the ground slowly rolled away underneath. Somewhere behind a motor-cycle seemed exploding its noisy way along. This was the engine, but it did not seem to be a part of the machine.

The aeroplane did not shake or tremble. There was nothing jarring anywhere—just the rolling away from under us. We seemed to be going along serenely and slowly, yet were going at almost a mile a minute.

I don't wonder any more why aviators like their work. It's a great way to travel—to quietly float along. One forgets the danger. It seems natural to be up there floating around in the air.

THE PARENT'S INTERCESSION.

Floating is the best word to describe the sensation of aviating that I know of—just floating.

I looked down at the great crowd of 20,000 people on the field. I looked far across country and as far over the water as the fog allowed, but I did not get dizzy or "trembly." It seemed as natural to be there as if I were on the piazza of a house overlooking the field.

Since the Harvard-Boston meet began I had seen every flight. Watching those aeroplanes "skiting" about through the air I soon felt a desire to fly. I saw Kearny in his Burgess machine come in smash twice. I saw Hamon tumble into a ditch. But still I wanted to go up in the air.

The next question was with whom to go up. I have known the Willard family intimately for some time. During a conversation with W. A. P. Willard, father of Charles, I brought up the subject of flying with the younger Willard. At first Mr. Willard, the father, did not take me seriously. "Why, boy, you haven't the nerve to go up with Charlie," he said.

I told him that I was determined to fly in the aeroplane. The result was my flight yesterday afternoon, and here is what happened:

THE PASSENGER'S SEAT.

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Charlie Willard ordered his mechanicians to wheel the new Curtis biplane into position for a flight. The mechanicians guided the aeroplane to the southwest corner of the field. Willard examined every detail long and carefully. He is a slight, pleasant faced young fellow of twenty-six years. He was born in Melrose and was educated in the public schools here. He is one of the leaders in aviation circles in this country.

He is one of the leaders in aviation circles in this country. And is holder of the accuracy record of the world.

But to return to the story. After examining the different parts of the machine Willard turned about and inquired: "Where's that BOSTON AMERICAN aeronaut?" I hurried up to the aviator and:

"All right. You can ride there. There was a little linen covered board on the left, and I crawled onto it and grasped the supports of the top plane. I took my cap off and threw it to Harry Willard.

"Keep it on, boy, you'll need it," said Willard, "and wear it back to the front."

The Start.

Willard crawled into the driver's seat beside me. The mechanicians crouched the propeller in the rear. The motor started, like the reports of a thousand guns. The mechanicians tugging at the rear kept it straight behind the machine. The planes quivered. Willard raised his hand. The trembling ceased. We were moving quickly along the ground on the three pneumatic wheels of the aeroplane.

GRAHAME-WHITE TRIMS AEROPLANE

Fog Impedes Work of Birdmen, but Big Crowd Gathers to See Flights—Chance for Boston Light This Afternoon.

Revised standing of the aviators, furnished to the BOSTON AMERICAN at 7:30 to-day by Charles J. Glidden, chairman of the contest committee:

	Speed Points.	Duration Points.	Distance Points.	Bomb Average.	Total Points.
Grahame-White	6	2	2	2.9	12.9
Johnstone		3	3		6
Willard	3			1	4
Curtiss	2			1 8-17	3 8-17
Brookins		1	1		2

To find the bomb average of a contestant, divide the number of points he scores by the number of shots he takes.

Getaway record to date—Grahame-White, 110 feet 8 inches.

Speed—White, 54 miles in 6 minutes 1 second.

Duration—Johnstone, 80 minutes 12 seconds.

HARVARD AVIATION FIELD, Squantum, Sept. 6.—In hope of seeing a repetition of yesterday's dazzling flights and a try for the $10,000 prize offered for flying down to Boston Light and back a couple of times, a large crowd gathered at Aviation Field this afternoon.

Grahame-White, the English manbird, who has so far excelled all others in the competitions at the Harvard-Boston meet, was on hand and said that he would attempt the trip to-day if the fog that began to settle shortly after noon lifted. Others who are out for this $10,000 purse offered by the Boston Globe said they were ready to make a try for it as soon as the weather was propitious.

HILLIARD MAKES FOUR SHORT FLIGHTS.

Earlier in the day William Hilliard in his Burgess-Curtis biplane made four short flights to his hangar. It seemed to be all right and it was expected that he would be heard from later in the day.

Charles F. Willard made a formal contest to-day to Charles J. Glidden against the stringency of the rules governing the meet in that they prevented Mr. Willard's friends from visiting him in the grounds.

Mr. Grahame-White was the great attraction at the grounds this afternoon and he was applauded whenever he appeared. It was said by one of his friends that he intends to spend all this Fall in America and try to clean up as many of the big aviation contests as possible. He is going in for all of the big prizes and long and hard flights.

The sun was trying to force its beams through the haze that hung thickly over the gray waste of water when Mr. Hilliard rolled his machine into the field. There were a few score of men in the field eager to catch the early birds. Hilliard glanced at them and smiled as he remarked:

"There's a pretty stiff breeze, but I want to try my motor a little and I shall make a little flight."

Hilliard climbed into the seat, started the motor and the biplane ran lightly, with a whirring sound, over the damp ground. After it had run about sixty feet the nose of the biplane lifted gently and soared into the air.

Hilliard did not try to perform any foolish tricks, but was satisfied to shoot in a straightaway course for a few hundred yards at a height of from five to ten feet. He did not desire to get out of the field. The machine kept on an even keel, and indicated to the men on watch that it is a very speedy air craft.

Has Speedy Machine.

The aviator Boston amateur, who has made many flights at Plum Island, showed that he had his biplane in perfect control, and he gave an indication of what might be expected of him later in the way of fast time.

"She seems to be working all right now," Hilliard remarked in one of the few moments he was on the ground. "I guess I'll soon have things in shape. It looks as though to-day would be fine for aviating."

The general opinion in the field was that an attempt would be made before the day ended to make the big flight to Boston Light.

Chairman Charles J. Glidden of the Contest Committee to-day gave out this statement:

"The object of the meet is to encourage amateurs to improve upon the methods now employed in navigating the air. With this in view the Harvard Aeronautical Society has brought together, at an enormous outlay, some of the world's greatest aviators, that the amateurs as well as the public may witness exhibitions of flying in the crafts best suited for the work and the latest creation of the human mind to date."

Early Hours Best.

"To assist the amateur, a full staff of officials are on the field daily, with a large number of newspaper correspondents, to record the progress made, as early as ten minutes of six in the morning. These early hours give the amateurs the advantage of the most favorable air currents in which to test their handiwork and earn to have it in shape for business in a short time.

"My trouble yesterday was due to a defect in the motor," said Mr. Hoe. "I guess I'll soon have things in shape. It looks as though to-day would be fine for aviating."

2 DROWN IN BARGE COLLISION

FALL RIVER, Sept. 6.—Captain William Brown and a man named Holmes, a deck hand, were drowned when the barge Bristol was sunk by the Union Transp steamer Dunmore off Barnegat at 11:30 a. m. Sunday. The Bristol was one of three barges under tow of the tug Concord, Captain Hewitt. The tow left Hampton Roads Saturday. News of the accident was received here this afternoon.

The Bristol was loaded with pig iron and was bound from Newport News to Philidelphia, N. J. There was a dense fog when the accident occurred. The Dunmore struck the Bristol on the starboard quarter. She sank almost immediately.

Captain Brown and Holmes were in their bunks asleep at the time of the accident. The men at the wheel, Frederick Johnson, a Norwegian, whose home is not known, was rescued. He was found floating in the water on top of a hatch which he managed to pull with him before the Bristol went down.

Captain Brown is survived by a wife and child, both living in this city. The family recently came here from Cape Cod.

VON CLAUSSEN FISTS KNOCK DOWN BANKERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Mrs. Ida Von Claussen, who has gained prominence in several ways, and who reportedly has declared that Theodore Roosevelt is one of her interest fone, to-day made a sensational raid on the United States Mortgage and Trust Company at No. 55 Cedar street, and using her fists, felled Calvert Brewer, first vice-president, and Carl G. Rasmus, second vice-president. Then she fled with friends in a taxicab.

She was quieted by employes of the company with difficulty and was allowed to go only on a promise that she would keep away Mrs. Von Claussen claims that $25,000 is due her from the estate of her grandfather, Michael Heinz, who died a millionaire. The company disputes her claim.

The raid was accomplished spectacularly. With a friend, Mrs. Van Slinger, she entered the office of the company.

"I'm tired of your lawyers, you have $25,000 of mine and I want it," she said.

A crowd of reporters whom she had first notified, she was going to the trust company to get the money or cause trouble, looked on expectantly. They were rewarded.

Mrs. Von Claussen attributed the delight of her presidential worship when she said: "Theodore Roosevelt of preventing her from being involved in Kentucky court."

MADRIZ MEN REFUSE TO SURRENDER

SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, Sept. 6.—The lake steamer Victoria, which was cut off from port when Rivas surrendered, returned, having on board General Mena and troops still loyal to the Madriz faction, which are being transferred from Fort San Carlos. Finding Estrada's men in control here the vessel refused to come to the pier or wharf, but fired several shots into the town and then withdrew, supposedly with the intention of establishing communication on the part of Madriz's in view of this incident the American Consul Yorkstone has ordered sailing for Panama, where she is to coal.

JAILED FOR ATTEMPT TO RESCUE PRISONER

Peter was sentenced to eighteen months in the House of Correction. The arrest was made during a parade on Cambridge street in the West End Sunday night.

CHURCHILL HURT IN TOUR OF FAR EAST

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Much curiosity not unmixed with anxiety is felt here over a dispatch printed in the Manchester Guardian to the effect that Winston Churchill, the home secretary, had been wounded in some serious manner. Mr. Churchill is making a tour of the Orient, and was understood to be travelling in Turkey or Asia Minor, or in Asia, but his exact whereabouts were not known until the receipt of this dispatch.

The rendezvous, which lacks details, states that Mr. Churchill was accidentally wounded in the leg. It adds that the injury is not serious, but discounts this by stating that the home secretary was taken to the English hospital in Smyrna, where he was operated on. Even the additional assurance that Mr. Churchill is doing well does not relieve the uneasiness of his fellow cabinet officers and Premier Asquith has telegraphed for further particulars.

Mr. Churchill was married on September 12, 1908, to Miss Clementine Hozier, a remarkably pretty and lovely woman, who has done much to soften the asperities of Mr. Churchill's disposition. The present position of Mr. Churchill in English politics and the brilliant future that is anticipated for him adds to the interest in the report of his misfortune.

GIRL BADLY BEATEN; WATCHMAN IS HELD

CLINTON, Sept. 6.—William R. Wales was held in bonds of $2,500 in the Clinton district court to-day on a charge of assault with intent to commit murder upon Miss Katherine A. Kelley.

Miss Kelley, while passing through a vacant lot, was knocked down by a piece of an iron bar, one of the blows causing a compound fracture of the skull. She was taken to the Clinton Hospital, where her condition was thought to be critical. The police were notified and in their search of the neighborhood found Wales asleep in one of the buildings in his care. He was taken to the scene of the assault, and while at the spot where Miss Kelley fell he picked up a pocketbook belonging to her. The police say that the finding of the pocketbook was a ruse and that Wales had it in his possession when he was found in the building. Miss Kelley has positively identified Wales as her assailant.

At the hearing to-day Wales was placed under bonds to await the recovery of Miss Kelley, who will appear against him at the adjourned hearing on September 19.

STEAMSHIP NEARLY STRIKES A DERELICT

The steamer Admiral Farragut of the [illegible] steaming [illegible] passengers and [illegible] aboard, [illegible] passage [illegible] Boston, [illegible] steamer was proceeding from Jamaica to Boston with passengers and a cargo of bananas and about dark, directly ahead of the ship, Second Officer Pemberton, who was on the bridge, saw the derelict, consisting vessel 75 feet long, to the port of the Farragut. He immediately altered his course and barely got her by in safety. The hulk was taken into Boston.

Rear Admiral Carrington, chief of the Admiral Carrington, hydrographic office at Washington, giving a minute description of the derelict, ordered Lobos, president of the Bayley Society had been ordered to the bottom of the sea. It is declared that Mr. Lobos had been offered this amount if he would permit the derelict to remain in the Bayley pool to be sold at a certain day.

LABORER IS KILLED IN GOTHAM CAVE-IN

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—A laborer was killed and three others badly injured to-day in a cave-in at the Fordham road and the Harlem river, where excavation is being made for several apartment houses by Bathgate & Sullivan. Seven feet of trap rock gave way, burying the men. The cave-in occurred at noon, when the workmen were eating their lunch. Two of the men were rescued by the police and firemen, who dug for hours with their hands, but the fourth man was dead when found.

BLACK HANDERS KILL EIGHT IN ONE FAMILY

REGGIO DI CALABRIA, Italy, Sept. 6.—To the vengeance of the Black Hand Society in New York is ascribed the revolting murder of Policeman Revolino and his wife and six children, formerly of New York, in the little village of Pellaro, eight miles south of Reggio, on the Strait of Messina.

In the dark hours of morning some of the townspeople of Pellaro were awakened by the terrified shrieks of a child and, rushing to the cottage occupied by the Revolino family, found the three-year-old daughter of the policeman lying with her throat cut before the open door of her home screaming piteously.

Tender-hearted people took the little child, the villagers carried her inside the house, where they were horrified to find the remaining members of her family lying dead, all of them having been terribly mutilated by blows from an ax.

The Revolinos suddenly returned from the United States a short time ago and since then, it is said, two attempts had been made to poison them. Revolino spoke of the possibility of vengeance being directed against him.

The crime was revolting in its barbarity. Besides the murder lay for four months old babe with its skull crushed in.

Despite the efforts of the surgeons to save the life of the little girl whose cries aroused the neighborhood, she succumbed to her injuries.

None of the townspeople saw or knew the murderers, who escaped from the village without leaving a clew as to their identity.

CRIPPEN DEATH CHARGE AGAINST GIRL REDUCED

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The charge against Ethel Clare LeNeve, codefendant with Dr. H. H. Crippen, was to-day reduced to that of being an accessory after the fact. This was announced when the hearing of the case was resumed in Bow Street Police Court.

Prosecutor Travers Humphreys also for the first time gave out the case of prosecution, declaring that the examination of the remains of Belle Elmore (Mrs. Crippen) showed that there had been an illegal operation on the victim which by chemical analysis revealed large quantities of hyoscin, one of the most powerful drugs known.

All night long crowds surrounded Bow street police court, to get a glimpse of the prisoners when they were taken in to-day for the continued hearing before Magistrate De Rutzen. As the day throng increased, and by the time the principals in the most enthralling mystery of a decade were ushered into the building flanked and led by guards fully 10,000 people were crowded about the court and on the adjacent streets.

Women Hurt in Crush.

When the prisoners mounted the steps of the building the crowd surged forward and several women were crushed.

Neither of the prisoners showed signs of illness, in spite of the fact that they have spent the last week in the hospitals of their respective prisons.

The girl appeared to be on the point of a nervous breakdown. Her slim form was set off trimly by a neat fitting tailored suit. She wore a large picture hat, with two lace in the hair by her sister, Mrs. [illegible] and from the rim there hung a heavy veil.

Both Crippen and the girl were allowed to sit in the court room. As their eyes met for the first time since they were parted after the fire hearing on August 29 something of tenderness crept into the impassive face of the doctor.

Crippen's Career Reviewed.

The first stage in the hearing was a review of the career of Crippen. Humphreys began with the story of the early years of the career when he took his medical degree in 1884. Then, step by step, he related the course of the prosecution's handling on the mysterious death of his first wife, Belle Elmore, the finding of hyoscin and giving details of the several business ventures in which Crippen was engaged, the manufacture of artificial teeth, real estate deals, and various medical institutes.

The prosecutor also touched on Crippen's defeat in the libel suits he brought against papers which denounced his institutes and establishments of a quack. When he came to the doctor's relations with his typist, he brought tears from the girl.

The prosecutor charged flatly that their relations aroused the anger of Mrs. Crippen. By this time the prosecution had advanced its theory of motive. The announcement of the result of the examination of the mutilated remains found buried in the cellar of Hilldrop Crescent, North London, created a sensation.

This examination made by Professor Pepper of Guy's Hospital, and Dr. Spilsbury, showed that there had been an operation performed on the victim. The chemical examination of Dr. Willcox revealed the presence of large quantities of hyoscin. One-tenth of a grain of this drug would stop the heart of the ordinary person."

Girl's Emotions Stirred.

Mr. Humphreys again stirred the emotion of Ethel Le Neve when he said: "Miss Le Neve told Inspector Dew that on July 8 Crippen told her he had died of pneumonia contracted aboard ship when he went to Dieppe. This contradicts other stories of her death told by him. Miss Le Neve then went to Hilldrop Crescent with Crippen and stayed there with him, being given Belle Elmore's furs and jewelry."

The prosecutor suggested that when the girl dealt with Crippen disguised as a boy she must have known he was a fugitive. "The court must decide whether Miss Le Neve be sent to trial," said the prosecutor in conclusion.

Inspector Dew's testimony relative to the chase and capture, given last week at the first hearing, was read. A pawnbroker's assistant testified that a man he thought to be Crippen pledged a quantity of jewelry with him on February 2, a day after Belle Elmore's death, was announced by Crippen. Again, on February 9, he pledged more jewelry, raising altogether $1,150. The case was adjourned until Thursday.

4 NEGROES LYNCHED BY GEORGIA POSSES

ATHENS, Ga., Sept. 6.—Four negroes are believed to have been lynched in the little town of Carlton, while a fifth, who accompanied them, was fatally shot resisting arrest. Three negroes entered the home of Robert Huff. Huff managed to give the alarm, and neighbors rushed to their aid, but the negroes escaped. Posses were quickly organized and scoured the country for the five men whom Huff had recognized as Cliff Bolten, three Cooper negroes and an Ivey boy. The Bolten negro was fatally wounded. Only meagre reports have been secured as to the disposal of the other negroes. It is almost a certainty that they have been lynched.

TREMENDOUS CRUSH IN BERKSHIRE HILLS

LENOX, Sept. 6.—On the eve of Labor Day Lenox hotels had to turn away hundreds of automobile parties. It is believed that seven hundred persons were refused accommodations here on Sunday because there was no room for them. Chauffeurs slept in their cars and wealthy men and women pleaded with hotel clerks for the privilege of occupying cots in parlors. The crush was the greatest yet known here. Mrs. W. C. Muir-Scheibelmer, wife of the manager of the Astoria in New York, slept on a cot in a Berkshire hotel. Mrs. Burdette L. Arms of Brookline was taken in during her quest for rooms, and a hospitable farmer offered her the use of his parlor, where she and her maid sat up all night.

CONSERVATION FIGHT WAXES HOTTER TO-DAY

ST. PAUL, Sept. 6.—If Governor W. R. Stubbs of Kansas and the governor do so, the first thing he would do would be to kick Secretary Ballinger out of office.

At least that is what he told members of the National Conservation Congress.

"The people of this country should erect a monument to Gifford Pinchot," he declared. "He deserves it for saving the coal lands of the country, if nothing else. I don't take stock in the Ballinger way of running affairs, and if I were President I would kick him out of office in a minute. I would like to see some of these Alaskan coal thieves. I'd put them where they belong."

The militant Kansas Governor, however, paid a slight tribute to Taft. His caustic and vitriolic address was called forth by remarks of Governor Norris of Montana, who advocated State control of natural resources. He hastily apologized and disclaimed that it was to be understood that he intended to do—as he said, to introduce Governor Vessey of South Dakota.

Later Governor Hay of Washington and Land Commissioner Ross, also of Washington, spoke to Governor Stubbs after the session, but the latter paid no heed to their remarks.

Ex-President Roosevelt arrived here in a blinding rain and at once plunged into the battle that is being waged at the conservation Congress. At the train Colonel Roosevelt was met by Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester, who is chairman of the Congress, and he got some inside information on the way things have been going. As a result of his talk with Pinchot the former President shortly after his arrival at the Hotel Radisson in Minneapolis took out the manuscript of the speech he had prepared for delivery before the Congress and began dictating some changes to his stenographer.

Colonel Roosevelt had then made up his mind to make an issue of the straddle of President Taft on the water power site question. In this way he will go squarely on record. Mr. Roosevelt's decision to pick up President Taft's cue on the price to those was have been with him on the trip, it is believed in Taft circles, is believed, for an opportunity to come out in opposition to the President's views.

ANARCHISTS MEET IN ZURICH, SWITZERLAND

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Among the passengers sailing on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. to-day were Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry, his wife and two daughters. Miss Gerry and Miss Mabel Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet and Master Oelrichs also left to spend six weeks traveling through Europe.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Sept. 6.—The election to-day of Lieutenant-Governor John A. Mead of Rutland to the governorship over Charles D. Watson of St. Albans, his Democratic opponent, together with all the other Republican candidates with the exception of a few Senators and Representatives is expected by both the Republican and the Democratic managers. They differ widely in their forecasts as to the size of the Republican victory, and in that question lies the principal interest in the biennial election.

The average Republican majority in Vermont in off years since 1870 is 19,200, while the average Republican plurality is 20,604. The Republicans this year will admit that they fear party apathy more than Democratic antagonism, and some of the leaders assert that if there be a decided drop below the average it will be due more to dissatisfaction with the candidates than to disaffection from the party itself. In fact, the national issues have scarcely been mentioned on the stump, the Democratic guns being trained straight at Dr. Mead.

Chairman Williams of the Republican State Committee predicts an average majority for an off year and perhaps a trifle more. His optimism is shared by Dr. Mead.

Chairman Harris of the Democratic State Committee said that the Republican majority of 27,000 two years ago would be cut to less than 10,000 and that his party would make decisive gains in both branches of the Legislature.

The Republican plurality of two years ago was 29,045 and the majority 26,817.

The vote for the minor party candidates has never been a prominent factor in Vermont. The Prohibition candidate for Governor this year is Edwin B. Towne of Franklin, while Chester S. Ordway of Proctor leads the Socialist ticket.

The Democrats have made no effort to supplant the two Vermont Congressmen—David J. Foster and Frank Plumley—and as there are no indications of insurgency in the State it is expected that both will be returned by customary pluralities.

Foster had 14,102 margin two years ago and Plumley 19,504.

TAFT DODGES GREAT CROWD AT CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—The crowd that filled the Northwestern station to welcome President Taft on his arrival from St. Paul to-day was disappointed. The President left the train at Market street, and those who had gathered did not get a sight of him. The President was met only by newspaper men and police and stepped into an automobile and was whisked away to the Congress hotel, where he had breakfast.

The committees which were to have met him failed in materialize at the Market street crossing. The committees later appeared at the Congress Hotel where the president had short conferences with Chief Forester Harry Graves and Assistant Attorney General Kenyon, who is in charge of the beef trust investigation.

Crowds greeted the President everytime he made his appearance. He left the city from the Lake street station at 10:45 o'clock over the Lake Shore road.

ARTIST CHANLER LEAVES CAVALIERI FOR AMERICA

Mystery Veils Sudden Separation of Gotham Artist and His Beautiful Bride.

By VANCE THOMPSON.

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—Robert Winthrop Chanler, the distinguished kinsman of the Astors, who, after a remarkable courtship, won and wedded Lina Cavelleri, grand opera prima donna, on June 18, has left Paris mysteriously, and it is supposed that he is on his way to America.

His beautiful and famous bride, who until a few days ago was convalescing in a Paris hospital from the effects of an operation for appendicitis, does not accompany him on the trip.

She is now at Cabourg, near Trouville.

Mr. Chanler, in company with his sister-in-law, Mrs. William Astor Chanler, of New York, left his wife's home, No. 22 Avenue Messine last Tuesday. His friends here are under the impression that he sailed for America.

It is reported in Paris that Mr. Chanler was unable, owing to family opposition to his recent marriage, to arrange the settlement of $20,000 annuity on his wife, which he had told his friends it was his intention to do.

Reported "Hard Up."

It was known among Chanler's artist friends that he was hard up recently. He was trying to borrow small sums and succeeded in the case of "Pop" MacComas, the American painter, who has just completed a portrait of Gould.

Wherever Mr. Chanler may be, he is not in Paris.

Meanwhile, Cavalieri has emerged from the hospital at Neuilly, where she was next door patient to James B. Hatmaker, the former private secretary to the late Cornelius Vanderbilt.

About the first person she met was Prince Paul Dolgorouski, a Mr. Tall Russian with a bushy brown beard and flowers in his teeth. Prince Paul is here to-day every day during her illness and it is said that he is now also at Cabourg.

Met by Russian Prince.

Dolgorouski is a picturesque political character and a member of a family that counted no y princes before the Romanoffs were Czars.

He is a close friend of the present Czar, but it is at the latter's suggestion that he now lives outside the borders of his native land. He organized the Duma and the reactionaries regarded him as a traitor to their cause and assailed him from the Imperial Yacht Club of St. Petersburg.

Prince Dolgorouski demanded to fight all the members in turn and two accepted the challenge. Shots were exchanged without damage. Since then the Prince has been a familiar figure in Paris and at Monte Carlo.

The report of Mr. Chanler's gift of the $20,000 annuity to his bride early in August, almost coincident with the sudden affection which took Mr. Hatmaker to Cabourg, where Miss Cavalieri was staying.

One night, Mr. Hatmaker asked an American friend, a Mr. Sullivan, to go with him. After dinner, he suggested that they run down to Cavalieri's house and get the diva and "Bob" to show them a little bit of life in the shape of Montmartre. But when they arrived at No. 22 Avenue Messine, they found that Cavalieri had just been taken to the hospital.

Sells Painting for $100.

Mr. Chanler was at home, and showed Mr. Hatmaker a picture of a little artist he had painted. Mr. Hatmaker thought it was good and bought it on the spot for $100, which would seem to show that there was not any great amount of money lying around in the Chanler household.

But the strange coincidence was that when Mr. Hatmaker got home he was suddenly ill. Dr. Mathieu-Lannes, one of the surgeons of the Hospital Wilson, woke up he found himself in an adjoining room to Cavalieri in the clinique.

"I don't remember anything," was all Sheriff Bob Chanler would ever say when asked about the beginning of his determined but matter-of-fact courtship of the beautiful Lina Cavalieri, but that was the only thing he was reticent about.

Announcing at the start that their relations were on a basis of absolute frankness, that they had both had their "pasts" and liked each other the better for them, the big, good-natured fellow poured forth comments on his love affair with characteristic candor.

But no amount of cajoling could make him tell how he fell in love. During last autumn and throughout the Winter there were teas in the studio in the Windsor arcade in Fifth avenue, drives in the park, automobiles ascended and visits to the Ansonia, where Mlle. Cavalieri lived while in New York, and the artist-sheriff became so persistent a patron of the Manhattan Opera House on the nights when Cavalieri sang that his friends began to realize that he was smitten.

But he went away to Europe and the affair was almost forgotten when early in February Mlle. Cavalieri received a letter from him, written in Paris and containing a proposal of marriage.

The basis of absolute frankness immediately made itself felt. Mlle. Cavalieri, authorized but interested in the appeal, declared that Mr. Chanler was a fine fellow and a model of American manhood, but she wasn't sure that she could give up the stage for him.

She wrote to him in Paris, however, a pleading him a definite answer within six months. She finally cabled him to New York "Yes, come on over."

Lina Cavalieri and "Bob" Chanler, Her Husband.

COLORED LAWYER STARTS COLLECTING

Edward Everett Brown, the colored lawyer of Ward 21, went to work in the collecting department of the city to-day at a salary of $1,200 per year. He will be employed as a deputy collector and gets the maximum salary for such work, which has led to much quiet criticism on the part of the other deputy collectors, who believe that he should have started in at the minimum salary, $1,200, the same as the majority of the other collectors. Brown was one of the original Fitzgerald men in the last campaign.

More AMERICANS are read in the homes in Boston than any other paper.

WALKER TALKS TO WORCESTER FAIR AUDIENCE

WORCESTER, Sept. 6.—Joseph Walker, Speaker of the House of Representatives, in an addresse at the New England fair here to-day declared that the future Massachusetts depended largely upon counteraction of the movement of the country population toward the city.

Discussing the milk controversy he advocated a cultivation of the "get together spirit" between the health authorities and the farmers. The railroads must adjust their rates so that they encourage instead of discourage the production of milk near the site of the market. He said that there is an earnest desire on the part of the Governor and the Legislature to settle the difficult problem of the milk question.

"The tendency to the population of Massachusetts," said Speaker Walker, "is to draw from the country to the city. The farm produces the best and the surest type of citizenship. I see this every year at the legislature. Many of the best legislators we have come from the country. Public opinion would surely degenerate were it not for the wholesome influence of the country districts. I wish there were a larger proportion of them. The encouragement of farming and the enriching of farm life is not alone a Massachusetts question. It is country-wide. Conservation of natural resources, irrigation, agricultural education and experiments, rural free delivery, postal savings banks, are all parts of this problem.

This was Governor's Day at the Fair and the fine day drew a crowd of more than 10,000 people to the grounds. Governor Draper and his party reached the grounds at 11 o'clock. They dined in Exhibition Hall.

GIBLIN OPENS WAR ON MAYOR

It was announced unofficially at the election commissioner's office to-day that the nomination of the name of Ex-Representative Joseph J. Murley of Ward 1 for a congressional candidate in the Ninth District, to fill the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of his own name, was entirely regular and its legality had been established by precedent. Ex-Alderman Thomas J. Giblin of Ward 2, another congressional candidate in the Ninth District, contended that the substitution of Murley's name was illegal.

Ex-Alderman Giblin announced to-day that he would make a final appeal to Murley and Fitzgerald candidate. "I will tell Fitzgerald three things," said Giblin, "and I speak," he said at City Hall to discuss the matter in East Boston in return I have got nothing, not even encouragement in the fight which I am making at the present. For that reason I propose to support him in the future, and I am an old Fitzgerald candidate for Congress in the Ninth District.

Meanwhile the office of the city committee said to-day that the Lomasney-Fitzgerald forces in the Ninth District would be given to Murley.

PRIMARIES HELD IN WISCONSIN TO-DAY

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 6.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette will be renominated by a vote of 2 to 1 over his opponent, S. A. Cook, in case the new Congressional Primary law is operative in the state. This is predicted by his adherents to-day. Despite the threatening weather the polls were crowded early and a heavy vote is being cast. The fight between Burr Williams and Congressman C. H. Weisse for the Democratic support in the race for Senator is a close one. C. F. Meitzerer, a LaFollette man, is in the lead for the gubernatorial nomination, so far as polls from 40 cities are able to judge. E. T. Fairchild, a Taft Republican, is his strongest competitor.

He appealed and was held in $300. Billings was accused of stealing the clothing from the home of John M. Dennisons at No. 195 M street, South Boston, Saturday afternoon.

FOOD SHORTAGE OUR PERIL, SAYS JAMES J. HILL

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 6.—A paper by James J. Hill was the feature of the opening of the Portland Fair. It follows in part:

"A nation that means to preserve its prosperity and control its own destiny must make sure that its food supply is adequate and will continue to be so. To reverse our movement toward industrial preponderance, food scarcity and permanent high prices, which has already gone far, is the item of the conservation program more important to us than all the others combined. This means conservation of the soil. It requires no expensive machinery, no subordination of land to federal interests, nothing but industry, intelligence and willingness to follow the teachings of experience. To all who, like those gathered here, have interests insensarably connected with the preservation and increase of soil productivity.

"The rising of live stock has a two-fold relation to the food supply of any country. Directly, it furnishes the meat diet, and, indirectly, as the most valuable of all aids to the cultivation of the soil and the growing of crops, it helps to furnish the bread diet.

"Since people learn mostly by the pressure of some need, the sharp rise in price of all kinds of meats has turned attention to the state of the live stock interest. Retail prices, in some cases double what they were a few years ago, stimulate inquiry. Investigation shows that live stock's production has not kept pace with the demand upon it.

"Seventy years ago, there have gone up. The breakfast table of the rich and the dinner pail of the poor are both affected. As one would expect from these figures, native beef cattle and Western range cattle sold for the highest prices on record in the Chicago market in 1909, the highest since the highest figure received 20 years seven years. Increase of population, changes in agriculture, drift of population, and, indirectly, as the most valuable of all aids to the cultivation of the soil and the growing of crops, it helps to furnish the bread diet.

"Those are a few of the facts bearing on the direct relation of the live stock interest to population, prices and the general welfare. As our population increases by nearly three hundred thousand souls per annum, and practically every person is a meat eater it follows that when the number on the agricultural food animals either remains stationary or begins to decline, the cost of living rises and the pinch begins. Not even the extraordinary prices paid for five years have thus far been able to raise production to the level of demand.

TRY THIS YOURSELF.

A Most Interesting and Surprising Test.

Take the best soap you can find, and wash your hair and scalp with it so thoroughly that you think they are perfectly clean. Rinse the head well and wash out all the lather. Then give yourself another shampoo immediately with Birt's Head Wash. You will be astonished to see how much more dust and dirt will be found. The water will be so discolored that you can hardly believe your own eyes. Another test is to have your own eyes, give you a shampoo, and when you get home use Birt's Head Wash yourself. You will find that the barber got out only a part of the dirt. This is because ordinary soaps and shampoos remove only the dirt that is ON the hair and scalp, while Birt's Head Wash goes IN and removes the dirt that clogs up the pores. A barber's shampoo leaves the hair dry and brittle, and the scalp tight and uncomfortable. Birt's Head Wash leaves the hair moist and glossy, while the scalp is supple and delightfully agreeable. You will never know the pleasure of possessing a perfectly clean scalp and soft, glossy hair until you use Birt's Head Wash. Tubes 25c., jars 50c.

MISS ELKINS TO WED DUKE IN FEBRUARY

PARIS, Sept. 6.—The date for the wedding of Miss Katherine Elkins and the Duke of the Abruzzi has been fixed for the latter part of February of next year, according to reports in circulation here which seems to be absolutely trustworthy. It is reported that the time was decided upon after a consultation between the prospective bridegroom and his eldest brother, the Duke of Aosta. The meeting took place at a Venice on August 2, but was carefully kept from the public until now.

There is every reason to believe that the Duchess of Aosta, who from the very first had strenuously opposed the match has at last withdrawn her opposition and has abandoned her proposed second trip to Africa, which was planned with the idea of avoiding being present at the wedding.

Within ten days, it is reported, the Duke of the Abruzzi will pay a visit to the Elkins family here, and at that time arrangements will be made for the presentation of the Senator's family to the Italian royal household. In order to avoid newspaper publicity as much as possible the presentation will take place at some obscure town in Italy and the party will be kept secret until after the ceremonies.

Will Be Made a Countess.

It is understood that before her marriage Miss Elkins will have conferred upon her the title of Countess of Teramo, the title being taken from one of the largest towns in the Abruzzi district.

The statement is made at the same time that Miss Elkins will become a member of the Roman Catholic church, and already the process of instruction in that faith have been made.

Mgr. G. Beccaria, the royal chaplain, will be the young woman's instructor, and it is stated he is aided in the work by Mgr. Bisletti, who was the private secretary to one of the Pope's personal ministers, as well as a close friend of the Pope himself. They have already agreed to undertake the task of converting Miss Elkins to the Catholic faith, and it is expected that she will be placed under their tutelage in a very short time.

The financial arrangements which are a part of the marriage have been attended to and it is announced that the matter has been settled to the complete satisfaction of both parties. The marriage portion will be a handsome one, it is considered extraordinary in amount here in view of the rank of the prospective bridegroom and the wealth of Senator Elkins.

No Official Denial.

"All the arrangements have been made save those which will be completed next week," said Lieutenant the Marchese Negrotto Cambiaso, as the representative of his personal friend the Duke of the Abruzzi, and Senator Elkins himself or some agent of his will be given full power to sign any agreements necessary.

A call was made at the Italian embassy in this city and the Duke's unofficial news were laid before the officials with the request that the reports be confirmed or denied. This was met with the statement that the embassy staff would be unable to confirm them, but that they would not deny them. This is regarded as tantamount to confirmation, as it is the usual place in private conversation with officials to say that tended strongly to confirm the story.

QUEENIE SANDFORD DRAPER, MOTHER OF SECOND BOY

DRAPER AGAIN A GRANDFATHER

Governor Draper received congratulations from all sides to-day when the news got about in the State House that the stork had visited the home of his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Bridges Draper, at Hopedale. Friends of the governor took advantage of the information to poke their head into his office and unfeelingly utter the words "grandpa." This was not the Governor's first experience in that role, but he seemed blissful to-day at the knowledge that he is twice a grandfather.

The new addition is a boy and comes as a brother to the other boy child of the Bridges Drapers—the one whose birth did so much to heal the breach between Bridges Draper and his father.

The new baby arrived yesterday. The mother was formerly Queenie Sandford, the actress, to whom young Draper was married in March, 1907. For a while the young husband worked at the Queen City cotton mill in Burlington, Vt. With his wife he went to Hopedale to live near his father in July.

JULIAN EDWARDS, COMPOSER, IS DEAD

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Julian Edwards, composer of many well known comic operas, is dead of heart disease in his home, No. 50 Sunnyside Drive, Lodow, a suburb of Yonkers, N. Y. He had been in poor health for a year, but had several new compositions under way. Edwards was born in Manchester, England, 63 years ago, and his best known stage compositions are: "Dolly Varden," "Dolly Varden," "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," "Brian Boru," "Princess Chic," "The Jolly Musketeer," "The Goddess of Truth," "Jupiter" and "The Victorian." His more serious works included the sacred cantata "The Redeemer," "Lazarus," "Miss Midas" and "Lord of Light and Love."

SENATOR BURROWS' DEFEAT PREDICTED

DETROIT, Sept. 6.—The strength of the insurgent movement in Michigan is to be tested to-day in the State primaries. Congressman Charles E. Townsend of Jackson is the chief opponent of the reactionary and he is opposing Senator Burrows for the United States Senate. Both sides are making political forecast. Townsend is claimed certain of the nomination.

MISS THAYER'S JEWELS TAKEN BY BURGLAR

MANCHESTER, Sept. 6.—Jewelry valued at $1,200 was stolen by a burglar who broke into the Summer home here of S. V. R. Thayer of Boston. The jewelry consisted of several diamond rings, a diamond and pearl studded watch, a string of seed pearls, a pearl clasp and several small pieces, mostly the property of Miss Susan Thayer.

The break was similar to the recent robberies at Narragansett Pier and Bar Harbor. The burglar obtained an entrance to the house, while the family were at dinner, by climbing the porch to the second story. He jumped from a second story window when surprised by Miss Susan Thayer in her room.

It is thought the man escaped in a motor boat, for after leaving the house he hurried away toward the beach, and a launch was seen being dropped away from the shore in the direction of Beverly.

DICKINSON PLAYS DUCK

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—Secretary of War Jacob M. Dickinson, aboard the liner Siberia, on which the head of the War Department traveled to Manila, dared two passengers to jump the six-mile swimming race rigged up on deck, and they did it. The Secretary, taking his morning walk with Brigadier-General Edwards, Major Sanford and Captain Lare Anderson, was discussing the lack of excitement.

They discovered the swimming tank. Then the Secretary looked at the cool green water. He looked at the immaculate costume of his military aides.

"I'll bet you fellows $20," he said, "that you don't dare follow me just as you are." They did, though.

When they had the secretary ducked the brigadier-general and with the other he submerged the captain.

"I'll bet nobody ever did that before," laughed the secretary as he climbed out of the tank.

"Never strong, sir," said the secretary's secretary, who had just arrived on the scene. Mrs. Miles Draper, wife of Major Miles, when she went out to the Philippines with the Taft party.

KILLS WOMAN HE TOOK FOR BURGLAR

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Mistaken for a burglar, Mrs. Louis Geis, thirty-six years old, was shot in the heart and instantly killed at 1 a. m. to-day in Kurt Wehslag, a boarder in her home at No. 420 East 138th street. Her husband and sixteen year-old daughter were grazed by the bullets fired in the hoarder, who collapsed when he learned of his mistake. The night before had a burglar got into the flat and stole several Mex dads.

LAWYER IS HELD FOR CHECK FORGERY

Robert Silverman, a Boston attorney, who was severely indicted by the Grand Jury last year, was arraigned before Judge DeCourcy in the Superior Criminal Court to-day on an indictment charging him with forgery, uttering and larceny. He pleaded not guilty and was held in $1,500 for trial. The check in question was made payable to A. Cohen and it is alleged that Silverman forged the indorsement and then obtained the money from the Federal Trust Company.

ROOSEVELT IN SPEECH BACKS TAFT POLICY

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 6.—The Roosevelt caused immense surprise in the conservation congress today when, instead of tearing loose and hurling a broadside at President Taft, he started his speech by a polite reference to the President.

When the former President arose to speak the whole convention was in a state of feverish excitement. It was known that Colonel Roosevelt had been tinkering with his speech since his arrival from Fargo today and it was believed that the alterations were to be a hard blow at President Taft's attitude on conservation as expressed yesterday at the convention. Colonel Roosevelt was known to be in favor of national rule if all reasonable, while President Taft favored among other things, State control of the waterways.

The President, instead of firing his guns at the administration, informed his audience that "Much of what he was going to say would be repetition of what the President said yesterday."

At this time the crowd broke out into a wild cry. The ex-President held up his hand and said:

Mr. Roosevelt caused a stir by warning the convention against the machinations of men who might attend it to subvert the real purposes of the organization.

He said in part:

Roosevelt's Address.

"America's reputation for efficiency stands deservedly high throughout the world. We are efficient proudly to the full limit that any nation can attain by the methods hitherto used. There is every reason to be proud of our achievements and yet no reason to believe that we can not excel our past. Through a practically unrestricted individualism we have reached a pitch of literally unexampled material prosperity; although the distribution of this prospect leaves much to be desired from the standpoint of justice and fair dealing. But we have not only allowed the individual a free hand, which was in the main right; we have also allowed great corporations to act as though they were individuals, and to exercise the rights of individuals. In addition to using the vast combined power of high organization and enormous wealth for their own advantage, the development of corporate action, it is true, is doubtless in large part responsible for the gigantic development of our natural resources, but it is not less responsible for waste, destruction, and monopoly on an equally gigantic scale.

"The method of reckless and uncontrolled private use and waste has done for all alike. The good it ever can, and it is time to put an end to it before it does all the evil it easily may. We have reached the time when heedless waste and destruction, and arrogant monopoly are any longer impossible. Henceforth we must seek National efficiency by a new path, and in new way, by the way of the orderly development and use, coupled with the preservation, of our natural resources in making the most of what we have for the benefit of all of us, instead of leaving the source of material prosperity open to indiscriminate exploitation. These are some of the reasons why it is wise that we should abandon the old point of view, and why conservation has become a patriotic duty.

"One of the greatest of our conservation problems is the wise and prompt development and use of the great waterways of the nation. The Twin Cities, lying as they do at the headwaters of the Mississippi, are not upon the direct line of the proposed Lakes to the Gulf deep waterway. But they are deeply interested in its prompt completion, as well as in the deepening and regulation of the Mississippi from the mouth of the Missouri and to the Gulf.

"The project for a great trunk water way, an area of the sea, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes, should not be abandoned. The Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterway, and the development of the rivers which flow into it, should be pushed to completion as speedily and without delay. But we must recognize at the outset that there are certain conditions without which the people can not hope to derive from it the benefit they have a right to exact.

Control by Railways.

"In nearly every river city from St. Paul to the Gulf the water-front is controlled by the railways. Nearly every artificial waterway in the United States, either directly or indirectly, is under the same control. It goes without saying that unless the people prevent it in advance the railways will attempt to take control of our waterways as fast as they are improved and completed, nor would I blame them, if we, the people, are supine in the matter. We must see to it that adequate terminals are provided in every city and town on every improved waterway, terminals open under reasonable conditions to the use of every citizen, and rightly protected against monopoly and must compel the railways to co-operate with the waterways economically, effectively and under reasonable conditions.

"The railroad lines will come to deliver freight to the boat lines, either openly or by hopeless prohibitory conditions, and the waterway once improved will do comparatively little more for the people who pay the toll.

"Adequate terminals properly controlled and open through lines by rail and boat are two absolutely essential conditions to the successful inland waterway development I believe, furthermore, that the railroads should be prohibited from owning, controlling or carrying any interest in the boat lines on our rivers, unless under the strictest regulation and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or that the shippers' interests may be fully protected.

Develop the Waterways.

"The people of the United States believe in the complete and rounded development of inland waterways, for all the useful purposes that can be made to serve. They believe also in forest protection and forest extension. The right for one million forests in the West has been won. After a campaign in which the women of Minnesota did work which should secure to them the perpetual gratitude of their States, Minnesota now has a National forest, and will keep it; but the fight to create the Southern Appalachian and White Mountain Forests in the East has not yet ever. The bill has passed the House, and will come before the Senate for a vote next February. The people of United States, regardless of party or section, should stand solidly behind it, and see that their representatives do likewise.

A National Duty.

"If any proof were needed that forest protection is a national duty, the recent destruction of forests in the West by fire would supply it. Even with the aid of the army added to that of the Forest Service the loss has been severe. Without either it would have been vastly greater.

"But the Forest Service does more than protect the national forests against fire. It makes them practically and increasingly useful as well. During the last year for which I have the figures the national forests were used by 22,000 cattlemen with their herds, 5,000 sheepmen with their flocks, 3,000 timbermen with their mills and 6,000 miners. More than 6,000 persons used them for other special industries. Nearly 34,000 settlers built the free use of wood. The total resident population of the national forests is about a quarter of a million, which is larger than the population of certain States. More than 200,000 acres of agricultural land have been patented or listed for entry within the forests, and the reports of the forest officers show that more than 4,000,000 people a year use the forests for recreation, camping, hunting, fishing and similar purposes. All this is done, of course, without injury to the timber, which has a value of at least a thousand million dollars. Moreover, the national forests protect the water supply of a thousand cities and towns, about 300 irrigation projects and more than 500 power projects, not counting the use of water for these and other purposes by individual settlers. I think that hereafter we may safely disregard any statement that the national forests are withdrawn from settlement and use.

"Delighted" With Progress.

"I have been astonished and delighted on my return from abroad at the progress made while I was away. We have a right to congratulate ourselves on this marvelous progress; but there is no reason for believing that the fight is won. In the beginning the special interests, who are now opposing measures for conservation fight, paid little heed to the movement, because it was then understood it now saw that if it won they must lose. But with the progress of conservation the minds of our people, the right is getting sharper. The issue has become clear, and we discover the opposition that we must meet, and the greater the need for caution and watchfulness. Open opposition we can overcome, but I warn you especially against the men who come to Congresses such as this, ostensibly as disinterested citizens, but actually as the paid agents of the special interests. I heartily approve the attitude of this convention, interested in the deliberations of a meeting such as this, which refuses either to advocate, by a speech of accredited agents, views which it believes to be wrong, or to send here in public to condemn with equal readiness the appearance of a corporate agent before any convention who does not declare himself frankly as such.

"This country, its natural resources, its natural advantages, its opportunities, and its institutions, belong to all its citizens. They cannot be enjoyed fully and freely under any government in which the special interests as such have a voice. The supreme political task of our day, the indispensable condition of national efficiency and national welfare, is to drive the special interests out of our public life.

DELEGATES ON HARBOR SAIL

Delegates to the number of 400, representing all sections of the United States, Canada and Mexico, accompanied by the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, who are here in connection with the annual convention of the International Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way, at the American House, left Rowe's Wharf for an excursion down Boston Harbor this afternoon. The steamer will go as close to Squantum as it can to allow the excursionists a chance to view the airships and will then go down as far as Boston Light and return.

When the session opened at 9 o'clock at the American House, President A. B. Stone of St. Louis appointed the various committees to handle the business of the organization. The committees will report tomorrow. Several propositions having to do with the affairs of the organization, it is said, will come before the convention.

Mrs. Cora B. Smith of Canton, N. H., was elected president, and Mrs. V. A. Jenness of Danbury, N. H., secretary treasurer at the convention of the Ladies' Auxiliary, which is attended by 125 delegates, at today's session.

LAMP EXPLODES AS WOMAN FALLS

HAVERHILL, Sept. 6.—Mrs. Charles Wilber of Maple street fell down stairs with a lighted lamp, and was so terribly burned that there is but slight hope of her recovery. The Wilbers had just moved into the house and were moving things upstairs. The lamp slipped from her hand, and at once she was enveloped in flames. Neighbors trying to extinguish the flames tore off all her clothing.

STONES IN POCKETS OF RIVER SUICIDE

The body of Iver Hokanson, formerly of No. 48 Pleasant street, Cambridge, was found in the Charles river near the Brookline street bridge by boys. Hokanson had been missing since Friday from his boarding place. He was out of work and had been suffering from nervous troubles. Stones found in the pockets of the dead man's clothes sustain the suicide theory.

LORIMER INVESTIGATION.

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—The congressional committee which was issued to investigate the charges against Senator William Lorimer will begin its sessions at the Congress Hotel, September 20.

MOTOR WORLD GOES TO THE AIRSHIP MEET

By J. C. KERRISON.

The attendance of motorists at the aviation meet is truly remarkable, and shows conclusively how flying has taken hold of the men who drive. Several of the men engaged in flying accomplished some real hard work in motoring before airships and aeroplanes came into fashion.

Grahame-White himself has driven more than one hard contest in motor circles; Glenn Curtiss has shown speed on the ground with motor cycles, being the holder of the world's motor cycle mile straight-away record with a cycle; [illegible] Hamilton [illegible] Bill" Hilliard is another man who was also a motoring record, he holding the Mt. Washington hill climb record and having established many fastest runs in Ormond and other speed carnivals. Omelich, too, who, while he may not have figured extensively in motoring annals, certainly made a record for himself in the bicycle days, being one of the first men to loop the loop on a bicycle.

Small wonder is it, then, that the navigation of the air has proven attractive to those men and is now the magnet that draws the motorists to witness the work at Atlantic. Not for several years has there been seen such a collection of motor vehicles as was seen at the aviation field yesterday and is there this afternoon. Yesterday the motoring world and his wife was there, and it was only with the greatest of difficulty that the motorists could drive to and from the field.

The going was worse for motorists than it was for the airmen. Above the atmosphere was murky, below the ground was slimy and muddy, the wheels of the cars sinking into the mud away over their rims and making going anything but good.

And yet everybody was there. To publish the names of those who were in publish in the trade social register of Boston and the North Shore.

Several new cars were seen at the field. J. W. Bowman came out with his new torpedo body Stevens-Duryea and he has new touring car models, both of which displayed the latest ideas and refinements of that famous Company. A. R. Hosley with his new Franklin torpedo was likewise seen near the front row, this car in operation of Franklin attracting no end of attention owing to its body construction and lines. Overland was there in the C. M. F.; Roy Page in the Mathewson; J. H. Mackinnon in the Columbia; E. A. Gilmore in the Chalmers; Arthur Hinchcliffe in the Winton; Crittenden in the American, and so on all down the line.

The Peerless salesmans and service depot on Beacon street was busy today dedicated to the Peerless business. Manager John F. Shaw, accompanied by President Kittredge of the home office, spent the greater part of the day in receiving and entertaining the visitors and customers.

The new building and the excellence of its construction and appointments were commented upon at considerable length, and all engineers of the Peerless establishment were congratulates upon having such a fine building centrally located and thoroughly equipped.

The 1911 Franklin car is now being displayed at the showroom of the company on Boylston street. Manager Hosley is justly proud of this latest conception of his firm. It is strikingly handsome in appearance and is bound to become most popular.

WOMEN WHO NEED STRENGTH

Will Be Interested in the Story of This Kansas City Woman.

After Years of Terrible Suffering She Tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and Became Well and Strong Again.

Miss Florence Whitehouse, a music teacher, of No. 636 Oakley avenue, Kansas City, Mo., found Dr. Williams' Pink Pills exactly suited to her case and her cure should encourage other women to give these pills a trial. She says:

"A few years ago I was afflicted with weakness, which followed a severe attack of malaria. I had severe pains through the small of my back and could hardly move around. It seemed that every bone in my body was sore. I was chilled through all of the time. During the warmest days of summer I would have to dress with heavy clothing. I was just like a skeleton and kept losing flesh. I would have terrible headaches. My head felt as though it was whirling around. My people thought I was going into consumption and I did not care whether I lived or not. I was sick for nearly six years.

"I was under the care of a doctor for several months. He kept me alive and that was about all. I could see no improvement under his treatment and, as a last resort, my people sent me to Excelsior Springs, Mo., thinking that the water there might help me. I did not improve much but while there I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as soon as I arrived home I began to take them. I could see a quick change after a short trial. I told my doctor what I was taking and he advised me to continue with them. He said they just hit my case. I took the pills until I became well and strong again and I have since been in good health. I cheerfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to weak women."

Two helpful booklets, "Diseases of the Blood" and "Plain Talks to Women," giving more information about the remedy will be sent free on a postal card request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. The genuine are sold only in packages bearing the full trade-mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

CARDINAL GIBBONS SAYS EXTRAVAGANCE IS CAUSE OF UNREST

BALTIMORE, Sept. 6.—In an interview upon causes of kinds of unrest prevailing in this country at present, Cardinal Gibbons declared that much of the unrest which is hampering the progress of the country is due to the too common lack of economy by the present generation and the desire for too many luxuries and extravagances.

"The people believe," he said, "that they must have autos, must go to the theatres, must have various kinds of amusements and must have many things, more or less expensive, without which their fathers and grandfathers got along well enough and prospered. The desire prevents a sensible conservation of the people's resources.

"The North American Review ascribes one of the causes of the prevailing unrest to the popular agitation against the trusts. But the people must remember that in our days there is a universal tendency toward organization in every department of trade and business. In union there is strength in the physical, moral and social world, and just as the power and majesty of our republic are derived from the federal union of the several States, so do men clearly perceive that the healthy combination of human forces in the economy of the world can accomplish results which could not be perfected by any individual efforts.

"Throughout the United States there is to-day a continuous network of syndicates and trusts, of companies and partnerships, so that every operation, from the construction of a leviathan steamship to the manufacture of a needle, is controlled by a corporation. When corporations thus combine it is quite natural that mechanics and laborers should follow their example.

"There is continuous unrest between the employed and the employer, and it would be most beneficial if this condition could be overcome. There should not and need not be any conflict between labor and capital, since both are necessary for the public good and the one depends on the co-operation of the other. A contest between the employer and the employed is as unreasonable and as hurtful to the social body as a war between the head and the hands would be to the physical body. Whoever strives to improve the friendly relations between the proprietors and the labor unions by suggesting the most effectual means of diminishing and even removing the causes of the discontent is a benefactor to the community.

"Common sense treatment of the so-called ills of which people of this country are complaining will result, the people will find, in their importance being greatly reduced. The country is growing fast, and with such rapid growth it is impossible that all conditions should be perfect, but what ills there are, what causes of unrest prevail, may all be minimized or overcome by the exercise of a Christian spirit and the application of common sense.

PRELATE PRAISES CONSERVATION

ST. PAUL, Sept. 6.—The following telegram from Cardinal Gibbons was read at the Conservation Congress:

"In reply to your letter of July 25, allow me to say how earnestly I wish the congress every success in the much needed work of national conservation.

"It is said that the French and Germans could subsist on what we waste, and I fear very much that to a stranger visiting our country it must seem that in 100 years we have consumed more of our natural resources than the nations of Europe have done in all the centuries of their existence.

"But if we have been reckless in the past, wasting like vandals our rich inheritance, it is almost consoling and full of promise for the future that with the strong aid of our President, of Colonel Roosevelt and of leading citizens from various parts of the country, we may look for wiser use of our forests in the near future.

And I am the more hopeful of a successful congress from the fact that there is no political issue involved in the great subject before it, which might threaten to divide your counsels and breed discontent, but that the sole motive that animates the congress is to conserve and increase our natural resources and thereby to contribute to the material prosperity of our country.

It is also decidedly my opinion that we should regard our natural resources as the patrimony of the nation, a sacred trust committed to our keeping, to be administered for the good of the whole people and to be transmitted by us, as far as possible, unimpaired to our posterity. By husbanding and using economically the gifts of nature, we shall have abundant supply for our own times and also make suitable provision for the future.

Mother earth is not only a faithful mother, she is also a grateful mother and repays her children for every kindness and tenderness we exercise toward her. And there are also instances on records to show that she is relentless when she chastises. Till my duties allow, I should gladly take a more active part in the greatly needed conservation labors; however, I hope you will be assured of my entire sympathy and of the hope I confidently entertained of the great benefits coming to us all as the fruit of the devoted labors of you.

JAMES, CARDINAL GIBBONS.

DRAPER RENEWS MILK BATTLE

A renewal of the war between the milk dealers and the Boston wholesalers, with the officials of the Boston & Maine and the roads bringing milk from the south added as a new factor in the controversy, is promised the next Legislature.

Governor Draper has had several conferences with protesting producers which, although informal, have led to his determination to see that all of the vital points in the dispute, which seems to be far from settled, be thoroughly threshed out by the Legislature, even if everything else has to be set aside to do so.

Protests have come from the farmers of Massachusetts, who say that the railroad rates are so adjusted as to make milk, even the most northern parts of New Hampshire and Vermont as easily and cheaply delivered as the product of the nearby towns. It is also declared that certain of the contractors have not paid the Winter schedule of prices, which was promised at the time the agreement of the distributors was entered into last June.

MRS. BERWIND LOSES GEMS

NEWPORT, Sept. 6.—Mrs. Edward J. Berwind is missing a valuable diamond horseshoe-shaped ornament which she wore when starting for the Newport Horse Show from her residence Saturday afternoon, and either lost it at the Casino, going or coming, or else it was stolen. Mrs. Berwind has advertised for the jewel.

James Dunn of Fall River, also reported the loss of $900 soon after he left the show to board a car near the Casino.

There is a belief that the thieves who have been raiding cottages recently at Narragansett Pier, where jewel robberies have been numerous, have started operations here.

GAYNOR WALKS SIX MILES IN HOT SUN

ST. JAMES, L. I., Sept. 6.—Mayor Gaynor walked six miles in a broiling sun, with the thermometer at 79 and the humidity at the same mark. He returned to Sherwood, his country place here, dusty and heated, but seemingly fresh.

CAR SMASHES MILK WAGON

Milk by the gallon was spilled early today when an outward-bound Mt. Auburn car crashed into a milk team owned by H. A. Prescott of Somerville at the Wolf and Mt. Auburn streets, Cambridge. Several passengers in the car were shaken up. Francis J. Sharkey of No. 66 Day street, West Somerville, the driver of the team, had a narrow escape from injury. He was thrown to the ground. When the car had stopped, Sharkey was under the fender close up against the front wheels. He was carried to the Cambridge Relief Hospital by a police ambulance.

PIER GAMBLING CASES GO OVER

WAKEFIELD, R. I., Sept. 6.—Two cases in connection with the recent gambling raid at Narragansett Pier came up in the Second District Court before Judge Nathan B. Lewis, and all were put over for a week. They were those of Chief of Police James D. Caswell of Narragansett Pier and George L. Cutting of Worcester, Mass.

NO THOUGHT GIVEN CRIMINAL'S YOUTH

The ordinary man gives small, if any, consideration to the reasons which start a man on the downward path. He has transgressed the laws and they demand vengeance. They make no allowance for the environment in which he has been trained, nor the lack of opportunities which he has enjoyed. Some consideration should be given to this subject by everyone.—District Attorney Pelletier, on an address at dance of Fat Men's Club.

GUILD HEADS ENVOYS AT MEXICO CITY

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 6. President Diaz received in the Hall of Ambassadors in the National Palace the special ambassadors of the United States, Italy, Japan, Germany, and Chile, attending the celebration of the Mexican centenary of independence. Ex-secretary Curtis Guild, Jr., of Massachusetts, the special ambassador, was introduced first and given the post of honor in the procession of carriages which followed the ambassadors from the department of foreign relations to the palace.

REPUBLICANS FILE PAPERS

The Republican City Committee threw open its rooms at No. 6 Beacon street, at 9 a. m. today for the filing of nomination papers. The absence of the usual rush made the committee headquarters look like a session of The Hague tribunal. When Secretary Herman Hormel arrived at 9:45 o'clock, there were only seven men without the doors, and these did not seem in any particular hurry to get inside. It was the quietest opening day the committee has had in a long time.

Edward Nyman, representing Leader Charles Innes of Ward 10, was the first to file nomination papers. Others who followed were George Ellsworth of Ward 16, Percy J. O'Connell of Ward 25, Charles Hintz, chairman of the Ward 18 committee.

Brigadier General William H. Oakes, in the Ninth district, was the only congressional candidate to file his papers, soon after the headquarters opened up.

DOCTORS BELIEVE KEENE MAY LIVE

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 6.—James R. Keene, the New York horseman and financier, who has been seriously ill at the Good Samaritan Hospital here, is reported to be much improved. His condition is so much better than it was twenty-four hours ago that the physicians are of the opinion that the most immediate danger has been passed.

Mr. Keene talked cheerfully with Major F. A. Dalgreifield, who is his personal attorney, while his condition was so favorable that his son, Foxhall Keene, spent most of the day at the farm.

CENTRAL SIGNALMEN DECLARE STRIKE

BUFFALO, Sept. 6.—A general strike of the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Signalmen employed on the New York Central between Buffalo and New York has been ordered by J. A. Martin, grand chief of the organization, as the result of the refusal of the road management to receive a grievance committee. The men ask for recognition of the union, the establishment of the seniority system, shorter working hours and an advance in wages. About 3,000 are affected. The railroad officials say the places of the men have been filled.

POST LOSES PLEA TO ENJOIN LABOR

RED OAK, Ia., Sept. 6.—Judge Smith McPherson of the United States District Court denied the request of C. W. Post of Battle Creek, Mich., for an injunction to restrain the American Federation of Labor and its officers and Parker Stove and Range Company of St. Louis from entering into a closed-shop agreement.

HEAVY FOG HOLDS UP TO-DAY'S SONDER RACE

MARION, Sept. 6.—To-day's scheduled race of the sonder boats may be put over until to-morrow because of the heavy fog which hangs over Buzzard's Bay. The wind early to-day changed from the southwest shore to the northeast, kicking up a choppy sea. If the fog lifts this afternoon the little boats will be sent over a triangular course, two miles to the leg. The following boats have been eliminated from the final races: Handit, Sally VIII., Sally IX., Juanita, Spokane III., Tobeggan II., Tomboy III., and Alarm.

BRUNSWICK TUB WINS AT LEWISTON

LEWISTON, Me., Sept. 6.—Nine hand tubs competed in the firemen's muster held in connection with the State fair. There were four entries in the first class, first money going to the Niagara of Brunswick, while in the second class the Androscoggin of Topsham and the Kennebec and Excelsior both met with mishaps.

DARING AVIATORS MAKE FLIGHTS, DEFYING FOG AND HIGH WIND

CHAIRMAN GLIDDEN ANNOUNCES NEW RULES GOVERNING VARIOUS EVENTS.

If possible, the valuable prizes offered to encourage them, among the prizes being the famous Harvard Bowl.

"An amateur can qualify or enter an event any time between the hours of 6 and 2 p. m., after which the field is held for professionals.

"Should there be any profit made out of the venture, the proceeds will be used exclusively by the Harvard boys in the purchase of aeroplanes and in further development of the art.

Greater Flights Coming.

"Prominent men have given much time and money to encourage the members of the society. The officials are serving without consideration or remuneration for any outlay in the way of incidentals for the benefit of the society, and in the interests of aero science.

"What has been done to date will be considered of little consequence if compared with that which is to follow in this, the greatest aero demonstration that the world has seen."

The four American aviators now realize that they will have to fly as they never flew before if they are going to prevent M. Grahame White, the ever smiling English flyer, from picking up about all the prize money which the Harvard Aeronautical Society has offered in the big meet. And, to-day, the third of the meet promises to be the crucial one, for now the fliers have each other sized up and know just what work is cut out for them.

AERIAL BATTLE NEW FEATURE OF AIRSHIP MEET

A mimic battle between a fleet of airships armed with plaster of paris bombs and a mimic hostile navy will be a feature of the Harvard aero meet and may take place any day this week. There is also a chance that the airship fleet may attack one of the harbor forts for the purpose of seeing how effective bomb dropping might be in respect to fortifications.

Chairman Glidden said the interest was so great he had been unofficially requested by a high Government official to ask the aviators, before the meet closed, to enter a specially arranged contest for dropping bombs from various elevations, perhaps a mile or more, at a target 50 feet in diameter drawn on the scale and plan now used.

Plan Big Airship Fleet.

In this contest a fleet of airships will be in the air at the same time. Mr. Glidden has invited Grahame-White, Ely, Harmon, Curtiss, Willard, Brookins and Johnstone to make up the sportsmanship rotary torpedo fleet, and if less than five aviators qualify Mr. Chaffin will be asked to place the special contest in the list of events. Before the great test is over, the aerial fleet may sail out over one of the forts in the harbor, with John Barry Ryan, son of Thomas F. Ryan of New York, who offered through the Harvard Aeronautical Society a $500 cup, to be competed for at this meet and future meets, in the bombdropping contest. The cup will carry a bronze statue of the Greek Commodore Barry.

Naval officers assigned to Atlantic waters are Lieutenant C. Blakely Kane, W. W. Short and Ensign R. W. Mathewson from the torpedo boat MacDonough, which with the torpedo boats Bailey and Stringham had been detailed for the aerial fleet to serve as patrol between the field, Boston Light and the upper harbor while the meet is in progress.

HONEYMOON FLIERS WILL MAKE SECOND FLIGHT AT MEET

HARVARD AVIATION FIELD, Squantum, Sept. 6.—Mr. and Mrs. Roger Noble Burnham, who held the record of being the first couple to spend their honeymoon above the clouds, are to do it in an aeroplane together during the big meet here. Arrangements are being made for the trip. The last time they were married, this year, will be taken up by Charles Foster Willard, the young Boston aviator, in his Curtiss biplane, the Golden Flyer.

The plans for their flight by Mr. and Mrs. Burnham were made practicable by the courtesy of the Harvard Aeronautical Society and the acquiescence of Mr. Willard. Since the announcement made today, aviators and spectators in general are up in the air with expectancy. It will be a sort of second honeymoon in the clouds. The celestial journey is expected to be one of the big features of the meet from the popular viewpoint.

Since the noted sculptor took his bride up in a balloon at Pittsfield, "going a mooning aloft" has become a widely used phrase. The couple will be commemorating of a celebration of the first wedding anniversary by Mr. and Mrs. Burnham. Neither the bride nor wife particularly about the time of day or night Mr. Willard is to take them. Both are fearless and daring. Mrs. Burnham holds the record of being the first woman to make a flight ride in a balloon. Theirs was the first honeymoon in the sky, and theirs was the first wedding breakfast served in the clouds.

Charles J. Glidden, chairman of the contest committee, is a close friend of Mr. and Mrs. Burnham. It was he who registered their recent flight in the balloon a year ago. Riding from Pittsfield on their wedding night, the couple practically crossed the Berkshire attaining an elevation of 2,500 feet and landing at Hallcock four miles from Pittsfield, Mass.

Mrs. Burnham was Eleanor Howard Warring. Both she and her husband are now greatly interested in aviation. They are expected to come up from Plymouth any day to make their second heavenly honeymoon ascension.

MRS. GUILD MAY TAKE AIR TRIP WITH WILLARD

Mrs. Curtis Guild, Jr., may make a flight during the aero meet at Squantum. Yesterday she was a spectator at Pittsfield and before leaving visited the hangar of Charles F. Willard. It is expected she accepted an invitation to take an trip with Willard.

The marine patrol of the waters bordering the course at the Harvard aero meet has been admirably carried out by the competent Battle of power boat made captain P. H. Derrett of the revenue cutter Acushnet.

The "dead line," marked by floats bearing small white flags marked "danger," extended from Squantum gut, between the Tenean and Pompoxy's Island to a point on the south side of the field. The line followed by the buoys was near the edge of the channel. As there are wide flats at this point, this brought the line near half a mile from the centre of the field.

About 500 yachts and other craft, of all sizes and descriptions, were anchored outside this line. Among these were motor schooners and steam yachts, but present also was a motley fleets, and every one in the bay crowded to the edge.

Drive Off Power Boats.

The patrol boats had no trouble with the anchored fleet, but were kept busy with sailing and power craft that chose to disregard the patrol lines. Such craft were first hailed and admonished, and if they failed to heed the hail, were boarded and towed to an anchorage beside the Gresham.

Aaron of the Gresham were anchored in line the destroyers MacDonough, Lieutenant Blakely commanding the first destroyer division, in command, Lieut. Bailey and the Stringham.

The submarine patrol launches were chiefly from the fleet of the Savin Hill Y. C. and were in charge of Captain D. Frank Lord of the power cruiser Optima, whose long line a revenue flag and had an officer from the Gresham on board.

Other launches and power craft that acted carrying an officer, were the Englia, Miss Redstone, the Resource, J. M. Gill, June, the Bohemian, J. Wills, the Chanticleer, the O. F. Jones, the Conners of M. D. Pratt, the O. F. Jones, the Conners of South Boston and the Naughty Girl, F. A. Jones of Quincy.

Yacht Owners Privileges.

Other launches on the patrol were the Linda Bell, W. H. Hickey; the Mascot, Fred H. Borden; the No Name, E. F. Landers; the June, J. M. Morris; the Dorothy H., Joseph Turner; the Eva S., E. R. Woodbury; the Resquod, W. H. Lombard; Silverbell, William Freshman; the Lonely, Hedric; the Viking, A. F. Bill; the Mollie, Kenneth Smith, and the Toy, C. W. Goodwin.

Inside the course nine only yachts belonging to the clubs having honors each of the Gulf torpedo were allowed to anchor or to pass while the patrol was on. These boats are the Savin Hill, the Dorchester and the Old Colony. The privilege was also extended to the flag officers' launches of the Boston Y. C., which has a station at Dorchester.

Curtiss in a Biplane Flying Under Willard

MISS CAMPBELL TELLS OF FLIGHT

GIRL DESCRIBES AEROPLANING AS JUST DELIGHTFUL

By MISS MARIE CAMPBELL,
New York Society Girl.

I am glad I had a chance to ride with Mr. Grahame-White in his aeroplane.

It was a splendid experience. I wasn't a bit afraid. The ground and the people seemed far away, but somehow I felt perfectly safe.

I have taken a ride in a balloon and I thought that was fine, but aeroplaning is better—faster, more delightful.

I want to go up again.

Miss Marie Campbell, a wealthy society girl of New York, made one of the most spectacular flights of the day at the aviation field. She was a passenger with Grahame-White, the popular English aviator, who took her for a mile and three-quarters ride in his Farman biplane.

The Campbell took a balloon ride not long ago with Holland Forbes at Pittsfield, and ever since then she has wanted to go up in an aeroplane. The Harvard meet furnished the opportunity.

She came over to Boston as the guest of Captain and Mrs. James C. Parr of Beacon street and went out to the meet with them. She was introduced to the tall, young Englishman, and begged him for a ride.

"I want to go up very much," she said. "Please take me for a ride. I have been up in a balloon, I am more about it I am not afraid."

Miss Campbell is a very pretty young woman and very gentle looking. She wore a trim blue serge tailored suit with a small felt hat, and did indeed look as if she had no business up in an aeroplane risking her life flying about over the head of folks.

She is slight and blond and blue eyed, and it is to be guessed that those pleading blue eyes did her trick, for Mr. White finally said:

"All right. Come along."

Doris Cap for Big Hat.

Mrs. Parr protested, but the girl was running along toward the machine. The aviator handed her a rubber, tobacco, gas-like cap and this was soon exchanged for the aforesaid modish hat. The machine was wheeled across the field close to the starting point. Miss Campbell and her friends hurrying along behind the dirigible. White.

When the big machine was in place and Mr. White was settled in his seat, he said:

"Come along, now."

Miss Campbell climbed up into the narrow seat beside him, caught hold of one of the rods which supported the plane and Mr. White gave the word to his mechanics to start the propeller. The plane was whirled about a number of times like the fly wheel of a motor boat engine, the engine tugged forward, the mechanics holding it back till finally it got a start. Whisker it started off across the field on its wheels and then in front of the grand stand rose into the air.

Everybody cheered and waved their handkerchiefs, and Miss Campbell waved back.

Down over the field toward the water and the big banks Mr. White steered his machine, keeping her steady in the air at about 175 feet up. Then the machine was turned and went just in the same long wait it reappeared down at the other end of the field, having made the round trip, and came back across the field, flying low, went down in front of the grand stand again as if to make another trip, then turned gently and came along the ground, finally stopping.

Judges, timekeeper, committeemen—everybody on the field ran out to the machine. Miss Campbell jumped out quickly.

"Oh, it was fine—just fine!" she said.

"Why, it's like being in a balloon, only better. I wasn't a bit afraid. It was awfully nice and comfortable up there. And how funny the people, the crowds and the country looked.

"I want to go up again."

Then Miss Campbell hurried away with her friends.

COMMITTEE FIXES "DURATION" LIMIT FOR CONTESTANTS

HARVARD AVIATION FIELD, Squantum, Sept. 6.—The Contest Committee has ruled that duration ends in the case of altitude-duration events when a contestant has returned to the ground, provided that the aviator promises an attestation of the place and time of landing from two responsible persons.

The Contest Committee has ruled that dropping a loads from an elevation less than 100 feet makes void that identical bomb score and does not count as a trial.

MUST FLY ABOUT 200 FEET HIGH IN SLOW LAP CONTEST

A new rule for the slow lap contest, which is likely to prove one of the most interesting at the meet, has been issued by the race committee. No trials have been made in this contest. The new rule follows:

"The contest for slow lap shall be made inside of the marked course, passing the judges on the right, at an average altitude of not more that 200 feet. Any deviation from this altitude for the purpose of coasting, like shall constitute a disqualification, at the option of the contest committee." In addition to obtaining the right to a great height for the sake of landing, the chief of passing over the course, it will give the spectators a much better opportunity to observe the movements of the aviators.

automobile folks down below. And they waved back excitedly.

A Flying Connection.

All the time the engine was roaring, was become accustomed to the wind. The noise troubled me no more. Willard in the meantime was talking things complacently. Just before we reached the second pylon post he turned to me and from the movement of his lips I knew he said:

"What do you think of it?"

"Bully," I yelled in reply.

Willard smiled understandingly and screwing his mouth into one corner he winked his eye at me.

In another minute we were sailing over the grandstand, having finished our first lap. The people arose in a mass and waved their arms.

On the start of the second lap we dipped low over the automobiles. I could easily distinguish the faces of those looking upward. I waved and they answered.

Earth Like Profile Map.

Again rounding the curve I waved back at the grandstand. This time I decided to see all I could. I gazed far out on the water. The water and fog ran together uninterestingly. Far below me the tide lapped lazily against the shore. The houses looked flat. As we flew over the foundation of a demolished home it appeared like a foot. The edges in the field, with little brooks running between looked like mountains and rivers. The grandstand and the people in it looked like part of a putty profile map such we used to see in school. We seemed to be going slowly. There were no bumpiness, no vibration, no dust. It was simply pure enjoyment.

I looked straight down at the earth. I did not become dizzy. I looked out over the country and at the water. Flying straight downward I could just see ground pass under me. Looking ahead and down I could view a pretty green landscape sweeping along toward us.

Of course I didn't know how long a ride Willard would give me. I had often told that the longest anyone was ever taken in this country was a mile and a half.

That is, any passengers. I made it all three and a half miles.

The Glide.

Passing over the last boundary post on the second lap I was merely resting my hands on the supports, one an upright and the other a wire. Without the least warning the machine darted downward at what seemed a right angle. I slid comfortably out of the little seat. I braced my feet rubber on a step-like affair of an inch in diameter. With one hand I grasped the support, with the other Willard's sleeve.

Now, I wasn't frightened. I just lost my breath for a minute and—well, I was not looking for this outdoor sport. It came suddenly.

Willard shut off the motor.

"We're gliding, Jog. Are you scared?" asked Willard. Of course I could hear him now as the engine was shut off.

"No," I answered, "not quite."

All the time we were sweeping at a terrific rate for earth. The ground seemed to come up with an awful speed. I felt certain we would hit with an awful bump. Just before we reached the ground Willard inclined the front planes and without the least jar we landed flight over the ground amid the cheers of the crowd.

The first man to greet me was Augustus Post, the New York millionaire aviator. He shook hands and asked:

"How did you like it?"

"Great," I answered.

HILLIARD AS AMATEUR MAKES FOUR FLIGHTS

HARVARD AVIATION FIELD, Squantum, Sept. 6.—The third day of the big aviation meet opened auspiciously with "Billy" Hilliard making four trial flights in the amateur class. This was Hilliard's debut upon this field. He used the Burgess-Curtis biplane, Model B. A group of early birds (men birds) witnessed the flights and praised Hilliard's work.

The first aviator on the field was A. V. Roe, one of the English professional contestants. He came down in good season, before 7 o'clock, to start repairing his Roe tri-plane, which was badly damaged yesterday afternoon when the chassis of the triplane collapsed just after it was brought to earth. Roe hurried across the field to his section of the west hangar and became very busy with repair work. He declared that the accident was caused by fault in the motor.

It will be remembered that when Roe and his English competitors arrived on the Cymric last week, Roe admitted that he preferred the Gnome engine, used by Grahame-White and Harmon, to the engine of his own design which he had on his triplane. He said at that time:

"If I had known as much about the Gnome engine six months ago as I do now I would be telling a different story."

Hilliard Follows Roe.

Soon after Roe came, "Billy" Hilliard arrived, in company with John S. Pfaff. They had Walter H. Bowman, Joe Burgess, Curtiss drivers, and Frank Lacour of Gloucester, the expert mechanics of the Burgess-Curtis camp. They were met at the Atlantic station by Joseph C. Schumaker of Boston, who is interested in the W. S. Starling Burgess aviation enterprises, in an automobile. They motored quickly to the field and hastened to the Burgess section of the west hangar.

Another early arrival was Augustus Post, the amateur, who went to the hangar to look over his Curtiss biplane with an eye to a possible flight later in the morning.

Walter H. Bowman of the Burgess-Curtis camp has just returned from Washington where he made two successful trial flights of a new biplane built by Dr. W. W. Clifton of Washington. This machine was ordered for Lieut. Post but was withdrawn at the last moment because it was declared it would not be ready in time. Some changes were needed in the machine. Bowman found the machine speedy in the two flights he made. He was much pleased with his work. He did not make any more flights in Washington as he had to hurry back to Boston to assist the Burgess-Curtis camp at Squantum.

Horace F. Kearny, driver of the Hilliard-Pfitzner monoplane of the Burgess-Curtis camp, was on the field bright and early. He wanted to try out his machine, which is housed in a separate hangar. Lieut. Post, the amateur, was using the east main hangar.

More Amateurs Entered.

At 9:15 the contest committee bulletined the entry of Hilliard in the amateur duration contest. He makes the second amateur to enter for any event. Clifford B. Harmon entered for the long-distance contest (amateur) last week. Hilliard was given the same time of his entry as to this noon for his duration trials.

Chairman Glidden of the contest committee arrived while the aviators were assembling. He gave out two rulings by the committee. One is that duration flights of altitude-duration events end when the contestant has returned to the ground, provided that the aviator can promise two responsible witnesses to his time and place of landing.

The other ruling is that dropping a bomb from less than 100-foot elevation must be void that score and does not count as a trial.

The first actual flying was done by Hilliard, who lost no time in trotting out the Burgess-Curtis biplane, Model B, from the hangar. Hilliard was assisted by Walter Bowman, John G. Stratton and Frank Lawson, the mechanician, in rolling the machine to the starting point to the west of the grand-stand.

He made two short flights down the field, keeping within the course each time and not rising more than ten feet.

On his third flight he took off at a 100-yard run along the ground, mounted to a height of twenty-five feet and kept down the course, cutting inside pylon No. 1 and clearing the first nearly. Then he kept on across the marsh to the second pylon, flying 1 but having the biplane under good control. After a half-mile flight he came back on the edge of the marsh, opposite Thompson's Island. The entire flight was consumed on by the other aviators as being very even and smooth, though was not fast.

Committee Cancels Score.

The contest committee bulletined Hilliard's third flight as counting toward the duration event. The time was given out as 2-5 seconds. Later this score was cancelled, as it was found to be only a trial flight.

Instead of wheeling his machine back to the starting point, Hilliard, for fourth trial flight, decided to start from the edge of the marsh back of the hangars. He alighted at the end of his flight. He started the engine and "took off" in fine style at 8:27. He rounded around on "down" the course, rising to a height of seventy-five feet when he neared the fifth pylon. He rounded into the stretch gracefully and came to earth yards back of the finish line. His descent was remarkably easy, the big biplane settling to the ground like a man setting down a basket of eggs. From the trial flights it was argued that Hilliard would make a good showing when he came out later in the day to compete in the amateur duration contest.

The aviators scanned the sky and wind gauges anxiously. The wind came from the northeast, blowing about 20 miles an hour. The air was damp and even but it was thought that it would "clear off" before noon.

When the gates were opened at 9 o'clock a considerable throng of spectators streamed in through the clicking turnstiles and up the main road to the field proper. The crowd, filled with pleasant recollections of the holiday flying, anticipated a fine aviation feast for to-day.

By 11 o'clock all the aviators were on the field except Claude Grahame-White and Charles F. Willard. The latter, who flies a Curtiss biplane, arrived by automobile at 11:15 o'clock. They went to their respective camps and looked over their machines with the usual detail care.

Horace F. Kearny's Pfitzner monoplane may be ready for use again during the morning. Kearny has decided to make the machine less so as to do away with he considers some unnecessary parachutes on the forward part. The elevator will be changed and the control will be shifted.

KAUFMAN HAS HIS HANDS FULL IN THE BATTLE WITH LANG

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS

RED SOX MEET WORCESTER TEAM ON OPEN DATE

LANG GIVES KAUFMAN HARD SIX-ROUND FIGHT

By TAD.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Bill Lang, the veiled marvel from Australia, was veiled at the ball park in Philadelphia last night and proved to be rather a healthy surprise. He was no Bill Squires and that's no Buffalo Bill. Although he was outpointed by Al Kaufman, the giant Californian, Lang had the crowd on its toes time and time again expecting any minute to see Kaufman lying flat on his back taking ice cool.

It was a great fight for Philadelphia this inauguration of open air fights by electric light.

Hatless and coatless the mob sat and waited. Women were sprinkled here and there down in the front where Anthony Drexel Biddle had a box were some richly gowned society belles, anxious to see just what a prize fight was like.

Hugh McIntosh brought thirty of his own police over from New York, but the management having no troubles of their own already, sent Mr. McIntosh's sleuths under the grand stand to watch the pipes but shells.

Charley Harvey and the veteran, Jack Fitzpatrick, mitted and mauled George Little showed Sunday how he got his training a few times, so that the crowd might pipe the Chelsea gentleman's shape. Phil Dawn O'Brien, with a light suit and a hat cane, smiled this side and that. Tom O'Rourke looked chilly and Tommy Dunn and Joe Humphreys told of the old days. Horace Fogel said that he was down there. Jimmy Johnson, with that "fine" hat of his, strolled, too. Oh, it was simply grand.

A bit later two preliminary stars entered and all sat down ready for the show.

The Music Gets Started.

The fighters were handsome. Charley Smith and Tommy Riley. Smith was a curly wolf for looks—he did. Red-headed, bull-necked and cross-eyed, he must have made a hit with the society folk when they went to the limit and some pretty close.

Then Kelly and Tommy Howell, light weights, then came in and put up six rounds of the heavy stuff. The gang kept telling the fighters with baseball stuff, as "Slide, Kelly, slide." "Touch second, How-ell" etc. Mr. Kelly landed a solid wallop twice, the second time as he was backpedaling to the end of Tuesday's ring which caused the fallen gladiators to smile and be more careful. Howell landed a stiff on that, but it was very even.

Kaufman, with a towel over his shoulders and carrying smaller towels in both hands came strolling across the grass tons under the grandstand. There were two nights about as Al made his appearance, followed by Billy Delaney, Bob Evans, Tom Kennedy and Jimmy DeForest. He smiled, bowed and jumped into the ring.

Lang followed a second later, wearing green tights. Bill was not with him, though. He was followed by a dozen Australians, among which were Kid McCoy, Cyc. Hugh McIntosh and Charlie Griffo.

The announcer then announced Sandy Ferguson, Joe Grim, Owen Moran, Jack Kelly, Young Erne, Pal Moore, Jack O'Brien, Kid McCoy, Billy Gibson and Billy Roeap, the referee.

The big fang and all eyes were turned towards the Australian. Every one wanted to see just what sort of a fighter he was—this new gentleman from the big island. He crouched just a bit as he faced Al. Holding his hands well in front of him, Bill kept the ends covered and over by which long bone left for the law and in landed. Right at the start he looked good, and we expected that the fight for. They fell into a clinch and right of the reel Kaufman began working that famous Johnson uppercut. He had learned the trick from the champion, and was belting Bill with it under the chin just as often as he tried, and it bothered the giant from Kangaroland considerably, causing him to lay and lay backwards.

In the second Bill was left extended for Kaufman crossed him on the jaw with a right, and you really could have heard Bill's teeth rattle from the ball. He shook his head and held on until the referee parted him, and then on the break both he and Kaufman let fly rights that might have torn the grandstand down had both landed at the same time. Lang were fearfully vicious and fearfully wild.

Lang Scores on Nose.

Lang showed his left out again and popped Al square on the nose, causing said member to turn red and swell a bit. He followed it up with a chop on the body with the same hand, hooking Bill and right into his corner as the bell clanged. Right here we were surprised at the aggressiveness shown by Lang.

Both started fast in the third, and Delaney, who had tried to get Al steadied down a bit during the minute's rest, called to him, "Now hold yourself together when he comes in." Bill did rush, and they mixed it around like perfect gentlemen, and the crowd in the grandstand howled for more. Bill was groggy. They broke and Lang came in again, landing two jerks to the head, getting away rubbing a cuff to turn.

The rocket broke in the thing then and, with his old on his neck, "Why, Al, I thought you were going to lick him." At that moment, however, Al unbuckled a right and clouted Bill on the chin with it, sending him to the floor. Bill was up in the ceiling and standing with a wallop that would have made Jack Johnson look like a piker.

PAGE CLASS NOW CLOSE FOR CHAMP

The Page Class team of Roxbury made a big gain on Brown Class, leader in the Greater Boston League, when it defeated Pilgrim Class of Dorchester at the Dunbar avenue grounds yesterday afternoon, 5 to 2. Page's win put the team one-half game behind Brown, and these teams will meet September 24 to decide the championship.

VICTORY FOR CON O'KELLY.

UTICA, N. Y., Sept. 6.—Con O'Kelly, an aspirant for heavyweight honors was so much better than Joe Corne of Pittsburg, that the bout scheduled for ten rounds was stopped in the third round after Corne had taken terrible punishment.

HEDLUND'S FAST MILE THE FEATURE

Before nearly 10,000 people, Oscar Hedlund of the Brookline Gymnasium A. A. ran a remarkable mile race, and furnished the star event of the card at the annual field day of the A. O. H. of Suffolk county, held at the Locust street grounds yesterday afternoon.

Hedlund, running from scratch on a track that was mud-soaked, was timed in 4m. 26s. The heavy shower that fell left the track in miserable shape, but this did not freeze the little Brookline man. Pitted against him as the best man in the event was Franz Marcean, the schoolboy star representing the R. A. A. Marcean had a thirty-five-yard handicap, and up to the last two laps looked as though he might hold off Hedlund.

STRAIGHT TIPS
FOR SPORT FANS

THIS IS THE DAY BEFORE THE storm. It may be a bit showery but the big noise gets to town to-morrow, for the Athletics will be here, and then look out for trouble. There is something certainly coming to those Mackmen when they get up at the Back Bay park and begin to throw the lassoo. Everybody says is glad Connie Mack is going to win the rag this year but still we can't get over the fact that it was oh, so close, and being near-champions certainly upsets one's feelings.

THOSE DUSKY GLADIATORS, BIG JOE Jeanette and Ho Ho Sam Langford are due to engage in Battle warfare at the Tripie A this evening to decide who is the fittenest candidate for to meet one Jack Johnson and wrest his laurels away. Both are so tough it's hard to make an impression either way unless war clubs or ice clavers are taken into the ring. This is a fine chance for Langford to prove that his enemy, the present heavyweight champion, should give him a whack at his title.

Straight Tips: As a reader of your interesting Tips and a believer in your honest, straightforward answers, I am asking you the following questions, with the fond hope that you will answer them in your truly character. Jake manager, Feb. who ran an English game, which no American could conscientiously play, and which caused the fans to lose all feeling in their fingers on a chilly day, failed to electric lights? If you were to walk without sneakers on their graves you would be pinched.

Straight Tips: Please tell me the world's record for baseball throw. And also if 300 feet is considered a good throw?
LAUTON.

Straight Tips: We are thinking of making a trip to Buffalo in a canoe from Boston by the way of the ocean to New York, then up the Hudson River to Albany through the Erie Canal to Buffalo.
JAMES SENEY.

Go to it, only get a life insurance policy out first.

Straight Tips: A friend of mine who is a sport promoter of Brooklyn, N. Y., is looking for a fight for Labor Day, Dec. 12. With football and harness games, and promises of long distance swimming race, and has asked me to get him the names of managers, etc. So I write to ye scribe to run an article through this following in your Sporting Tips column. Question: Is there a manager of a football team, soccer or rugby, whose initials and their addresses are known to the public? Answer: He is probably Second Prince, Brooklyn. Tips: Who is to arrange a big field day to Boston on Columbus Day, October 12.
SAM B. MYERS.

Straight Tips: If the following question does not take up too much space will you kindly answer it? How many of the prominent ring fighters of the past twenty years have exhibited their prowess on the gridiron? The way to be a good fighter is to be one of Ted Lajoie's.
LOUIS CARSON.

Perhaps Ted will answer it. We are not getting into any controversy on the race suicide question.

FRANK KRAMER HURT IN BAD BIKE SPILL

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 6.—Several of the best known professional bicycle riders of the country were thrown into a nasty spill in a two-hour race at Vailsburg. Champion Frank Kramer sprained both his elbows and tore flesh off both arms. Carl Yanard of New York broke his right collarbone and suffered possible internal injuries. Fred Hill of Boston was badly cut and bruised. Bennie Hill of Boston received his right knee cap, and Edward Ruprecht of Newark broke his left collarbone. The race was called off.

DALLAS CHAMPION AFTER HARD FIGHT

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 6.—Dallas won the pennant in one of the closest finishes ever known in the Texas State League. For several weeks the race has been between Dallas and Houston, only a few points separating the two teams. After yester day's games the final standing showed Dallas with a total of 83 games won and 57 lost, a percentage of .593, while Houston won 82, lost 58, a percentage of .586. San Antonio was third with 555 points, and Shreveport fourth with .546. Next in order came Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Galveston and Waco.

GOODWIN BREAKS 10-MILE SWIM MARK

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 6.—L. B. Goodwin of the New York Athletic Club won the national ten-mile river swim here. Michael Hebermott, unattached, of Chicago, second, and W. S. Meritas, Chicago Athletic Club, third. The official time was 1:30:49, which is more than twelve minutes faster than the best time made by H. J. Handy of Chicago, a three-time winner of the event. The swimmers competed in a heavy rainfall. Most of the thirty-four starters finished.

LET'S GET RIGHT DOWN TO BUSINESS AND TALK ABOUT GOOD CLOTHES

MELVIN WILLIAMS

I might start the Fall advertising campaign for Gale & Kent by telling you all about their newly furnished tailor shop at 96 Court Street, or think up a dozen ways of attracting your attention—but I think I'll pass up all that bunk and get right down to clothes.

If you are not interested in getting a well-made, stylish, serviceable suit of clothes, then all the "alteration sales," "mark down sales," "flim-flam sales" and so on, will not get you into a tailor shop or a clothing store.

Gale & Kent run a tailor shop. For 18 years they have been located at 96 Court Street, just around the corner from Scollay Square, and during all that 18 years their main object has been to make absolutely satisfactory clothes for their customers.

The Spanish war has been fought, the Japan-Russia war has passed into history, Roosevelt has been President, toured Africa and returned again, aeroplanes, bi-planes, dirigible balloons and other things have all been perfected, but Gale & Kent have merely plugged along at making the best clothes they knew how, year in and year out.

It doesn't seem much of an accomplishment when compared with the great national and scientific achievements of history—but we can't all be Presidents, Diplomats and Inventors.

Some of us must write advertising. Others must make clothes—good suits for people who demand the best.

Gale & Kent have made the tailoring business their life's work. They have made 96 Court Street an ethical location. They have put it on the commercial map, and they are going to keep it there.

They carry in stock the finest line of rich, new woolens of any firm in Boston.

They make the most stylish, best fitting, cleanest looking suit of clothes of any tailors in the city at any price within $15 per suit.

For their price—$15 to $25 for suit or overcoat—you will get the equal of any other high grade tailor's $30 to $40 offering. 96 Court Street means $15 saving to you. Don't get the location out of your head.

This is the opening word of the Autumn Season. New clothes should be ordered right now. Take my word for it—there isn't a tailor in America who will give you the same value in return for your money as you will get at Gale & Kent's, the tailoring firm at 96 Court Street. Open evenings till 9 o'clock—Saturdays later—during the season.

No Hair

Is so Thin, Faded or Infested with Dandruff but that This Remedy Will Overcome the Trouble.

Simply because you have tried all sorts of advertised hair remedies with unsatisfying results, don't condemn them all as useless. Here's a letter from Mr. Andrew Kohler, 2005 First Ave., New York. Read it.

I have now a bd of "Quk" advertised for thi pair, and had tried them all with poor success until I read of Lorrimer's Excelsior Hair Tonic. I will not be without it now. It is the very best hair preparation, and was made no mistake in calling it "Tonic." It fed my hair and stopped it falling out on the first application. It made my hair grow where I had no hair before. If you have any person that is troubled, just hand them my name and let me tell it to them.

Get Lorrimer's Excelsior Hair Tonic at Riker-Jaynes or any good drug store and get busy with that hair improvement in store for you if you use it faithfully.

Candy Eating

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

THE KING OF CANDY LAND.

HAVE you heard of the King of Candy Land?
Well,listen while I sing
He has pages on every hand.
For he is a mighty king.
And thousands of children bend the knee,
And bow to this ruler of high degree.

He has a smile, oh! like the sun,
And his face is round and bland.
His bright eyes twinkle and glow with fun
As the children kiss his hand.
And everything toothsome, melting, sweet,
He scatters freely before their feet.

But woe! for the children who follow him
With loving praises and laughter.
For he is a monster ugly and grim
That they go running after;
And when they get well into the chase
He lifts his masque and shows his face.

And ah! this is a gruesome sight
For the followers of the King.
Cheeks grow pale that once were bright.
And they sob instead of sing.
And their teeth drop out and their eyes grow red,
And they cannot sleep when they go to bed.
And after they are the monster's face
They have no peaceful hour;
And they have aches in every place.
And what was sweet seems sour.
Oh woe! for that sorrowful foolish band
Who follow the King of Candy Land.

ALL you people how much cheap candy your children consume?

Almost every child encountered to-day on the street is tapping a lollipop, or munching some kind of a bonbon. In seashore resorts "fudge" parties are almost a daily event in the social life of the lilliputians.

When not attending fudge parties the children are teasing for pennies to buy candies at the village shop.

What are the parents thinking of? Bridge and motor cars, as a rule; while the nurses look after the children, by leaving them to follow their own methods of amusement.

Children need a certain amount of sweets, good refined, unadulterated sugar in small quantities is beneficial to them. So is pure honey. But the continual consumption of all kinds of bonbons, the gorging down of fudge, chocolate, peppermints and lollipops is destructive to a child's digestive apparatus; it ruins the teeth and turns fresh complexions into sallow ones.

The candy habit, like the drink habit, is most easily prevented by never being begun.

There was a wise doctor, once on a time, who began with his baby, as soon as she could understand words, to call candy and all bad stuff candy was. In his estimation. He told her how it made the teeth ache, the breath foul, the pink cheeks pale, and explained how almost every little girl and boy ate it because their parents did not know it was so bad for them.

In every way he won the child's confidence and made her faith in his ideas absolute, because he was just, and kind, and considerate. He gave her small portions of pure sugar, and told her, on no consideration, to accept candy from any one.

At ten the little girl had never known the taste of any kind of confectionery, and she had no desire for it, because her belief in her father's knowledge was absolute.

But this method of bringing up a child requires work, thought, personal supervision and time. And these are much easier to let the nurses look after the children, and to see them only at bedtime, when they say their prayers.

They Call It "Will of God"

And then, when they are ill, to send for the doctor and a trained nurse, and when they grow up with all sorts of digestive troubles and toothache and other ills, resulting from impaired physical machinery, to call it the will of God, or the result of some inheritance from the "nervous side of the family" (never from your own side).

Unquestionably there are pure candies which, consumed in a small quantity, harm no child. But the best of confectionery, eaten all day long, or two or three times a day by a child, cannot fail to harm it. And the cheaper candies sold at the average shop are little short of slow poisons.

"What fools these mortals be," who take no personal responsibility in the ailments of their children!

"Criminal negligence" of parents should be appended to many a death notice of children.

A Woman's Best Asset

By DOROTHY DIX

IF the fairy godmother of tradition were hovering above the cradle of any girl baby to which I had an especial interest I should pray her to bestow upon the tiny occupant of the crib, as her best gift, good nature.

I would not ask for beauty, nor wit, nor genius, nor wealth, but just the genial, easy-going ability to take life as it comes, with cheerful smallnesses, and without getting nerves or hysterics, and a wingspy disposition.

When we enumerate the qualities that go to make a successful woman we talk about her looks, or her intelligence, or her talents, but none of these are the potent charm to conjure with that good nature is. It is the real philosopher's stone that works magic, and that opens every door for its happy possessor.

The Really Popular Girl

Wonderful and marvelous are its powers. Does a girl yearn for the admiration of men, to be a belle, and have a train of suitors hanging about her? Who does? Not the beauty, who is generally aloof. Not the living pictures, who are so cutty. Little things about other women, and whose conversational claws draw blood every time she reaches them out toward a new subject. Not the petrified dream of a beauty who is difficult and hard to please, and who has a discontented and disgruntled attitude towards life.

Ninety-nine times out of a hundred the popular girl in any community is just an ordinary looking girl, with no pretensions to any especial good looks or intelligence or style. But she is good natured. She is willing to divide her popularity credits with all the other girls. She tries to make everybody have a good time, and is ever ready to listen with sympathy to the tale of a man's success, or his failure.

She isn't hard to please. Lord bless you, no! She enjoys everything that comes along, and uses flock about her like bees about a honey pot, just because she is so sweet, and wholesome, and flavorsome as an old-fashioned flower garden in May.

If a woman wants to be a successful wife, why, her best asset is also good nature. In domestic life an ounce of amiability and cheerfulness is worth a ton of clever theories about how to keep a husband.

Good Nature Is Lacking

A great many women, who are perfect models of all the domestic virtues, whose houses are as neat as pins, whose children are always well cooked, and who do their duty to the last hair, wonder why it is that their husbands wander from the domestic fireside, while the husband of some other woman, who is not half as good a manager, can't be induced outside of his own door.

The answer to the conundrum is, good nature. Many a good wife spoils all of the results of her cheerful self-sacrifice by being cross and querulous, and fault-finding, and exacting and nagging. We don't always love martyrs and enjoy them as much as we should—particularly when they martyr themselves on our account, and insist on telling us what we have made them suffer. But one of us can get enough of the company of the cheerful optimist who thinks life is a pretty good old world, and that we are about the best things in it.

The Successful Mothers

Men who have married beauties have wearied of them. Men have divorced wits and deserted geniuses, but no man ever yet found matrimony a failure who was wedded to a woman who could leave their daily life with good nature, who could laugh at mistakes, who didn't hold him up to an impossible standard and who was ready to meet the exigencies of existence with cheerfulness and common sense.

And it is the good natured women who are really successful mothers, too. The mothers who have the greatest influence over their children are not those that sacrifice the most for their offspring, or the mothers who spend most time praying over their children, or the mothers who lecture their children or scold them, but the mothers who raise their children according to out-and-dried child culture rules.

The mothers whose children we envy are the mothers who are good-natured, who laugh with them, play with them, look upon childish pendilloes as cardinal sins. The good mother knows that any of us have are of some good natured woman —mother, or grandmother, or maiden aunt—who didn't scold when we tore our clothes, nor lecture when we robbed the cookie jar.

The Business Success

Finally, in business, good nature is not only a woman's best asset, it is almost a necessity to her success. It does not make any difference how much talent a woman has, unless she is easy to get along with, when others are working with her.

We all wonder why Miss So-and-So, who is so competent, never can keep a job as a stenographer. The reason is that she possesses a razor-edged temper, and every time any correction is made in her work she flies into a temper of anger, or else goes into the sulks.

We are surprised that Miss What's-Her-Name, who is really an artist with her needle, has never been able to make a living as a dressmaker. The reason is simple enough. She offends her customers and is so ill-natured that she drives them away. We don't have to be angels, with disagreeable people, you know, unless we are married to them or they are members of our own family.

Good nature is woman's chief charm, and when she has that all else shall be added unto it.

Back from the Country

And Cupid returns from the country at this, the Autumn season. He is brown and happy. He has decked himself with purple asters and he holds aloft his trophies of the Summer and the country, the hearts of men and maids. His Summer keepsakes of letters and gloves and locks of hair he scatters broadcast, for he will have no use for them in town.

Two Kinds of Vulgarity

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"SHE is absolutely impossible," declared the women on the veranda.

"Why?" said a sunburnt young man, who was lazily puffing at a short black pipe.

"Why?" rose the chorus. "How can you ask such a silly question, Tommy? Would anyone with any pretensions of being a lady, use such vile perfume? It scents the whole place. You can tell she's been in the room ten minutes after she's left it."

"Well," said Timmy, imperturbably, "she's awfully pretty, and I'm going to get to know her if I can. I'm going to take her out in my canoe."

"Well be able to tell you by that time."

"What's your rush?" asked the grocery boy.

"You haven't even asked me what I want to know for. If you seen the fellow that was talking to me about you you'd know I don't care. I'll just tell him that there's nothing doing and let it go at that.

"Was somebody asking you about me?" inquired the pretty cook, ardently. "Tell me about him, please."

"Him wouldn't be interested," grumbled the grocery boy. "He wouldn't suit you, anyways. He ain't got more than a million dollars between him and starvation, and he's got one nubbin, got to speak of two feet, and a gold flicker."

"I suppose a woman might get along with a million if she was to economize," mused the cook. "What is his bad habits?"

"He's too easy-going, for one thing," replied the grocery boy.

"You've got nice manners and a kind heart!" asked the pretty cook.

"He sure is," said the grocery boy. "All of that."

"Well," said the pretty cook, "if I didn't have a place that was paying me fifty dollars a week, with not more than sixteen hours work a day, I'd think the matter over seriously."

The girl was very pretty—Tommy was quite right about that—but, also, the perfume was abominable; my own nose told me so.

She was a big-eyed, pink-cheeked girl, as fresh as a rose. What a shame for her to use such perfume!

It was the kind that I often notice in the city streets; you can smell it half a block, after passing the woman who wears it.

I think most girls use perfume with the idea that I have already mentioned, that it is merely a means of attracting the attention of men like it. They are greatly mistaken in that; men hate perfume.

Plenty of soap and water are all the perfumes you need, girls.

There is a sweet freshness about a young girl that needs no artificial aid. I wish someone could tell this pretty little girl how vulgar the strong perfume she uses makes her appear, and how people are misjudging her.

The girls and women who ridiculed her and gave the men a chance to laugh at her, and make jokes about meeting and losing her out, were far more vulgar than she, for their vulgarity came from lack of kindly feeling.

A Poor Sort of a Woman

It is a pretty good sort of women who goes against her own sex.

Remember, girls, that well-bred women use only the most delicate of perfumes, and a good perfume is very expensive. Some of the expensive extracts are very delicate, most people find them very objectionable.

If you must use perfume, use one that is delicate and only a little of it.

Be as extravagant as you like with soap and watery. Nearly all doctors will tell you that cold baths are the secret to health, as well as cleanliness. A good powder lightly dusted over the body after the bath is refreshing; but don't use too much or it will clog the pores.

Live sensibly; take good care of your teeth, brushing them several times a day and using dental floss. Bathe often and you will be as sweet as a rose without relying on perfumes to make you sweet.

The Pretty Cook on Marriage

She Decides to Stick to Her Job

By KENNETT HARRIS

"EVELINA, I want to ask you a question," said the grocery boy, when he had looked his morning order. "It's a sort of delicate question, I'd like to get your views. What do you think of this here marrying business?"

"I don't think anything about it," replied the pretty cook. "I'm too much afraid of it. In the first place, of course, I know in a general way that people get married, but I ain't got no call to think thoughts concerning the institution. I ain't had no experience."

"Sure you haven't," said the grocery boy, but supposing, short, active, energetic, good-tempered, free-spending, nice-looking young man was to marry you. What would you do about it?"

"Are you talking about yourself?" asked the pretty cook. "Because if you are, it would depend upon how much I was laying around handy. I wouldn't do more than nipple you, I don't expect."

"I wasn't talking about myself," denied the grocery boy. "I want that understood right now. It's natural for you to think the description hits me, but I was putting a case. Suppose it wasn't me, but somebody nearly as good. How about it, then?"

"If he wasn't no better than you are, I'd have to pass him up," answered the pretty cook. "I hate to hurt your feelings, but that's the size of it, and now I think the storm is all over and it would be safe for you to try to get to the wagon."

The grocery boy did not take the hint, and it really made no quite ill. He had to ask the head waiter to change or seat at table. She sat at the same time, and it really made me quite ill. I am sure she noticed that I have cultivated nerves; she guess the reason, and it may teach a lesson."

The talk and laughter went on until the soup of women and girls had succeeded in making the unfortunate girl a laughstock. Many jokes were made at her expense; the young men, though at first attending her, finally laughing with the rest.

I sat and listened and wondered which was the more vulgar—the over-use of perfume or the unkind criticism of one who was unable to defend herself.

Alias Jimmy Valentine

"I'VE thought it out, boys," was Jimmy's answer to their pleadings. "She'll be back here for me in a minute and I'm going her way."

But Jimmy's two pals were not going to give him up without a stiff struggle. They pleaded with him that the girl would not return. Both swore that they saw her with her father as they were behind the curtains. They had a view of the street and father and daughter were walking toward the depot.

"She's got to them and stayed them off," declared Red.

"Jimmy will never leave your tracks," suggested Avery.

"I can beat him," answered Jimmy.

"You ain't going to lose that coin I've got all staked out, Jimmy," pleaded Red. "Seven thousand, if it's a dime, and it will give you a trip to Europe to brace you up after the time in the stir."

"Sorry, but I'm going to lose that," said Jimmy.

"But you won't lose the old thrill of going into a bank just before dawn," said Red, "handing the watchman and feeling out a combination in the dark."

"And sewing the soft safe open like an oyster and grabbing the dough," suggested Avery.

Jimmy felt the itching of the fingers and of the muscles. He shivered. Then, in a flash, in which she was a part owner. The thought of having her here always near her warmed her heart and kept blushes playing upon her cheeks. So thought him handsomer than ever, and Jimmy, when he saved silent a chance at her, thought her an angel of divine beauty.

All troublous thoughts of Doyle passed out of his head.

"My daughter tells me that your name is not Valentine, but Randall," began Ranger.

"Yes, sir; Valentine was the name I was arrested under, and I kept it rather than disgrace my own name," said Jimmy.

"Well, Mr. Randall," resumed Lane, "I presume no one wishes to forget the past more than you do. I am going to explain a situation to you and offer you employment."

"While I thank you," interjected Jimmy, "I could not accept a position at your hands or at the hands of your daughter. It is far better that I secured a position among strangers and started out without assistance."

"Hear Mr. Randall," pleaded Rose.

"I think you are wrong," said her father, "I understand perfectly the spirit which prompts you to take this stand. Still I think you are wrong. First, we know, or think we know, the one thing against you. We believe, while knowing this, that you are trustworthy. I am the president of a national bank in Springfield.

Jimmy's heart beat faster.

"Springfield, Mass.?" he asked.

"Illinois," replied Lane. "I own 30 per cent. of the stock of the bank and my daughter owns 40 per cent. It is her wish, to which I assent, that I take you in the bank as my employe."

"But Mr. Lane," Jimmy started to protest.

"One minute, please," interrupted Rose's father. "You will get a salary that could salary to begin with, but as you learn the business your advancement will be rapid, presuming, of course—"

"I understand," Jimmy interpolated.

"And don't you see that, in a year or two, you would be a banking man with me?" asked Rose with sparkling eyes.

"And this also I ask you to consider, Mr. Randall, her father added. "In the position, your past cannot affect you. I have not known you long, but what has happened, we are concerned only with the future."

"You are very generous, Mr. Lane," stammered Jimmy.

"Won't you let us repay the debt I owe you?" asked Rose, with anything? They haven't seen the standing of a house dog.

"You're tired, Bill, and ashamed of the years you have lost. Now, here's your chance. Take it, Bill, and abandon the old idea of introduction to the CHAPTER XIX.

"OH, thank you so much for waiting," exclaimed Rose as she came close to Jimmy. "We were kept much longer than we thought we would be kept."

Rose was radiant. She had helped convince her father that it was the right thing for him to do to take Jimmy into the bank, in which she was a part owner. The thought of having her here always near her warmed her heart and kept blushes playing upon her cheeks. So thought him handsomer than ever, and Jimmy, when he dared steal a glance at her, thought her an angel of divine beauty.

"Yes," he said.

"I'll be waiting for home now," said Mr. Lane. "When shall I expect you to report?"

"In a week," replied Jimmy.

Jimmy shook hands warmly and, with smiling faces, he and father and daughter went away.

Jimmy stood watching for them to pass at the street window, when Red Jocelyn re-entered the room and slipped up beside him.

The perdoned convict turned sad saw his old friend.

"Red," he said, solemnly, "I've got my chance. We're going to be straight from now on, with the help of God."

"What do I do?" asked Red.

"You trail along with me to Springfield, Ill.," said Jimmy. "You can get a job there, and in a year's time I'll have a good one for you."

"Dead on, Jimmy!" asked Red.

"I'm going to make you a watchman in a national bank."

MISS APPLETON FIRST BRIDE OF AUTUMN

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

First in the gay pageant of Autumn brides came pretty Madeline Appleton, who to-day wed that popular young clubman, Vincent Kidder, at the Ascension Memorial Church in Ipswich. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. William Greenough Thayer of St. Mark's School, Southboro, assisted by the Rev. Reginald Bearce, the rector of the church.

Miss Appleton, who was a debutante of last Winter, and who bears the distinction of being the first of that group of buds to don bridal attire, is the daughter of Randolph Morgan Appleton, whose Summer home is "Waldingfield" in Ipswich.

The bride, who wore a handsome imported gown of white satin and lace, was attended by her sister, Miss Julia Appleton, as maid of honor. William Eustice Russell of Cambridge, a classmate of Mr. Kidder, at Harvard '08, was best man, and the list of ushers included Gordon Ware of Framingham, Patrick Grant, 2d, third son of Judge Robert Grant; George G. Ball, Harold Parker of Lancaster, and Kenneth Howe of Brookline, all classmates, Alexander Galt Grant, '07, Francis H. Burr, '09, Charles L. Appleton of New York, and Charles Wiggin of Pomfret, Ct. The bride was given away by her father, and the reception took place at the Waldingfield. The wedding party was limited to the members of the two families. Miss Appleton is tall, slender and dark, and bears a strong resemblance to her mother, who was Helen Mixter. She is a Vincent Club girl, and also a member of the New Riding Club. Mr. Kidder is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kidder of Brattle street, Cambridge.

Mr. and Mrs. James Cummings Barr of Boston and New York, have left the North Shore, are now at their home at No. 249 Beacon street, during the time Mr. Barr is on the reception committee of the Harvard Aviation Meet.

Miss Barbara Boltes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Boltes of Jerusalem road, Cohasset, has just returned from a delightful visit with Mrs. Henry M. Wagg and her daughter, Miss Josephine, at their villa at Northeast Harbor, Me.

Mr. and Mrs. Remsen Whitehouse who have just arrived from Europe, are the guests of the latter's mother, Mrs. Henry Bigelow Williams, at Nantucket. Mrs. Frederick Parker of Marlboro street, a sister of Mrs. Whitehouse, is also of the family party.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Peabody are to return this week from York Harbor, where they have been since August 1, and will go to Hillbrook, their country estate in Milton, for the Autumn.

Miss Katherine S. Atterbury, the fiancee of John A. Tuckerman, has just concluded a visit with his mother, Mrs. Charles A. Tuckerman, at her fine estate, Appledrol, Ipswich.

Miss Martha Codman, who is prominently identified with the social life of Newport, Boston and Washington and who has been spending the Summer abroad, will not return to Newport before the 1st of October. She recently went from Ireland to London, where she will remain several weeks before going to Paris.

'I AM REINCARNATED,' DECLARES POETESS, ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

"I Was a Peasant Girl, but I Had Beauty and Brains," She Says.

Two big iron griffins guard the gate to the snug estate where lives Ella Wheeler Wilcox. They snarl at the wayfarer in most terrible fashion, but vines have crept up to them and now hold them in leash. Entering the place through the shade of many fine, old trees, you come to a bungalow, weather stained and mellow. From the porch is to be had a vista of the Sound from the Connecticut shore, a wide and far stretching reach of water.

The place is called Shore Beach, and it is good and far away from railroad trains and towns. The running schedule of the trolley service from New Haven puts the time at forty-five minutes, but it takes pretty nearly two hours to reach the home of the woman who is, perhaps, the most popular of living poets.

Of course, it is impossible for the many thousands of BOSTON AMERICAN readers to crowd behind the scenes and get an intimate view of the life of the men and women who work for their pleasure and their own living, but this writer was able to spend a day with Miss Wilcox in her pretty home place and to get from her a bit of insight into what she has never written, and, perhaps, never intended to write herself. What she thinks, she talks, but she writes how she lives, what she hopes for in the ultimate analysis. Human beings are the raison d'etre of an interviewer, as an older, may hope to give you. She herself might not desire to be an autobiographer

She Loves to Laugh.

She is a slender woman, and with a graciousness that makes for beauty in her every act, in her every word and it all her thought. She has, also, the wisdom of the East. Every human experience and emotion seems to have been absorbed by her fine intelligence and stored away in the almost countless cortices of her brain.

She has sunny hair and a sunny heart. She loves a laugh, and she impresses one with the idea that she may not be dismayed by tears. The grist of life pours in a steady stream into her mill.

"Most women," she said, beginning right at the beginning, "prefer to say that they are descendants of kings. I am a peasant born. I was born with brains, and could not help being a writer. My dear mother knew that I would write, and she helped all she could. She had the intellects that she gave me.

"Work? Reflections of manuscript? Plenty of both. I shall never forget the first money I made with my pen. I got $10 for three poems. The other day I got $1000 for one poem and it was most beautifully illustrated. I wrote a book when I was eight years old. I wrote a great deal of poetry as a slip of a girl, and it is odd that since I have lived through maturity and have a grasp of my weapons I have come to learn that publishers and readers like the heart wails I used to write.

"My English publisher insists on most heart wails, and so I keep on wailing. A volume of my poetry about to be printed in England I started to call 'Echoes of Youth,' or something of that sort, and Theodora Garrison, who is one of our poets to-day, suggested that I call it 'Yesterdays.' Isn't that a splendid title?

Miss Wilcox does not like to write poems.

"How often do you go over a poem before it is finished to your satisfaction?" she was asked.

Writes Poetry Naturally.

"Not often," she replied, smiling. "It comes quickly and easily for when I write prose, then I have to go over it again and again. Poetry I write naturally, and the work always delights me. To meet the demands on me, I generally keep about two months of copy ahead. Then I can go abroad and have a holiday or do what I please, for I know that I have plenty of copy ready for the AMERICAN people.

"Do you see much promise in the minor poets of America?" she was asked.

"Yes, indeed," she replied. "There is more talent in the world to-day than there ever was in the history of letters. We have splendid poets and prose writers, composers of music and artists. Look at this."

Miss Wilcox picked up a volume bound in the Roycroft shop. "Elbert Hubbard bound that volume and did not charge a penny for the work," she said. She opened the volume. Every word and every letter was done with a pen, and the initials, borders and illustrations were all hand illumined. In some of the fourth century work of the monasties—those manuscripts that are still in the museums and have not yet fallen into the hands of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan for his personal and private marble library and art gallery—she said the parallel may be seen. The man who did this volume signed it "Brother Percuinus," a gray brother in the Monastery or Le Trap. His signature was a part of hard fate for the Monastery of Le Trap is the prison at Charlestown and Brother Percuinus is in it for his second term as a burglar. He has six more years to serve.

Sent Autograph to Convict.

"I came to know the burglar in this way," said Miss Wilcox. "One of the prison attendants wrote me and said that a convict had asked for my autograph. I sent a copy of my poems he had done into a volume himself. She sent the copy. I was astonished at its beauty, and only too gladly gave him my signature. I showed it to Elbert Hubbard, and he had the best binding possible put upon it. I would like some day to sell it for him—sell it to some collector of rare and beautiful works in bookbinding.

"Brother Percuinus is not asking a pardon. He is not asking anything. He told me that the world acted him nothing. His only objection is that his first offence might have been followed by a merciful sentence, a short one. He got a long one, and went out of prison hardened, perhaps. He told me that his idea of justice with a burglar was that on the first conviction he be let down easily, and on the second he be sent up for life. He will serve out his six years more without any complaint. He mastered an art as a convict—the making of beautiful books. He has also learned to write music, and he writes real music, too.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

"I Had My Salon in the Time of Louis XIII.; I Died and Was Born Again."

idea of equity and justice in human life.

"My convict friend, Petronius," she said, "has a fine idea of it. There is a creed that reaches all of us eventually. It is the creed of kindness to others and a sense of justice in paying for your own sins and evil behavior.

"You believe that all of us must settle our scores for our wrongdoings?" Miss Wilcox was asked.

"Yes, she said. "I am trying to settle mine. You know I believe implicitly in transmigration. I know that I have lived before and I know what that life was. I was then a peasant girl, but I had beauty and brains. I achieved fame in Paris and I had my salon in the time of Louis XIII. I lived then in a way that I would not have lived. I made myself the centre of a brilliant group of brilliant people. Richelieu was a friend of mine, and that is perhaps the reason for my present dislike for clerics.

"In that plane of life prior to this plane I am now in I learned all about the famous cardinal, and I am sorry that I saw only behind the scenes. I died and was born again. Now I have to square things, to live so that I shall offset that which was not the right thing for a woman to do, and yet every now and then I feel the pull of the old wicked life in my heart. I wrote that into a poem. You could you like to read it? Here it is:

Her youth had been a loveless waste,
Starved by no holiday.
And she had toil for roof and bread,
She gave her work in pay.
(Oh, the mean memories vague and strange and dear.)

She drank the night's insidious wine
And saw another scene—
A stately room, rare flowers in bloom,
Herself in silken sheen.
(Oh, vast the chambers of the moon and wide.)

A step drew near, a curtain stirred,
She shrank, with secret alarm.
Oh, splendid face, oh, manly grace,
Oh, strong, impassioned eyes.
(Oh, silent moon, what secrets do you hide?)

The warm red tips of thirsting love
On cheek and brow were pressed;
As the bee knows where honey grows,
They sought her mouth, her breast.
(Oh, the dead moon holds many a dead delight.)

The speaker stirred and gruffly spoke,
"Come wife, where have you been?"
She whispered low, "Dear God, I go
But 'tis the seventh sin."
(Oh, the sad secrets of that orb of white.)

Man Who Led Spirit Life.

"Then," the interviewer suggested to Mrs. Wilcox, "you have in your mind a full picture of your life before you were reincarnated."

"I have that," she replied, and her eyes brightened with the enthusiasm that only a woman who is profoundly interested in a thing can show to her heart's core in conversation. "You know," she went on, "we have not gone very far into the psychic phase of human existence. I have it most remarkable correspondence with an unlettered man who lives in Colorado.

"That man's soul left his body frequently. He lived a spirit life when he was in these trances. He told me of meeting a young girl in one of these trances. The first saw her face as in a dream. He saw it a second time and a third time. Then he saw the girl as a living woman, and she spoke to him. They walked together. This man wrote me in detail these trance occurrences. He told me in one of his letters that he and the girl of the spirit world walked into a village. The woman there did not see them, could not.

"There was a pot of water boiling on the stove. He said, 'Let us lift it over.' She told him that they could not do that yet, and that some day they might be able to reach the spirit life into the physical life. But he insisted and the two of them tried to lift the pot of water over. They did, and the woman spanked her little girl for her carelessness.

Met Sweetheart Every Night.

"But that was not all of this man with the spirit development which permitted him to range into the unseen. He and his sweetheart met every night, and finally they walked in a garden. He wanted to pick a rose. She bade him desist. He insisted on his desire. She told him that neither the one nor the other could break the stem of the rose. Both would be required to pull the flower. His hand and hers reached down together and the rose was broken from its stem. She cried in agony that she was hurt. In his letter to me he wrote that he awakened with a pain in his hand, and that it was the very case in his hand, and that it was the middle of Winter in Colorado, with never a rose blooming within his reach.

You might want to apply the familiar and always pleasing anathema, 'Bosh!' to all of this, and, perhaps, add the word 'rotten' to it. But Mrs. Wilcox isn't strange at all. She impresses one more as a seer or mesmeres than a woman with a poetic fancy can mold.

"There are certain sterling elements in her nature that check you up as you try to classify her with the intellects that have gone beyond the bounds. Ezekiel, who wrote splendid poetry, was also a prophet. His vision of the Kingdom of God and the Throne of the Creator made the wise ruler-kings stand in awe of thinking as Judah. One ancient commentator was filled with the idea that he could untangle the thing and make the book a canonical one, when its crowning fault was that it was bizarre. The other ravens told him to go ahead and record their sins with a hundred pencils and oil, enough oil to keep him swearing and his pencils and his brain busy for more than a hundred years.

Tells of Temptation in Poem.

She rummaged about in desk drawers in her workshop digging for one of her keep, still another poem she had mentioned as the interviewer read this note which tells of the old life and the lure of its wickedness.

REINCARNATION.

He slept as weary toilers do.
She gazed up at the moon.
He stirred and said, "Wife, come to bed."
She answered, "Soon, full soon."
(Oh, that strange mystery of the dead moon's face.)

Her cheek was wan, her wistful mouth
Was lifted like a cup.
The powerful night dripped liquid light.
She seemed to quaff it up.
(Oh, that imbrued corpse that lies in space.)

Her life had held but drudgery.
She spelled her Bible thro';
Of books and lore she knew no more
Than little children do.
(Oh, the weird wonder of that pallid sphere.)

"Mrs. Wilcox a Prophet"

Of course, the vision was never quite cleared of the lure that dims the netherland.

Mrs. Wilcox would make almost any interviewer a convert to her psychic-dentalism. She is a prophet in her way. Her eyes look out dimly, but wisely. She has a creed and she has a God, and it is the same creed and the same God most poor people have tried to find. It is humaneness. She fairly saturates you with the sense of kindness, sweet brotherly, benison.

You feel when you talk with this woman that you might tell her that you were hungry and you had no money. She would bake the bread for a wayfarer. She would not give you bread that has been bought in a store. If you should come on the range and be needy, I think you would find in her a friend.

STEAMER IN FOG HITS SCHOONER

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—With her deck swept clear of lifeboats and rigging, and her after deckhouse and upper deckhouse forward, fore and aft, the Brazilian steamer Tapajos put into port yesterday in charge of a prize crew from the vessel which she had run down off the entrance to the Delaware breakwater.

The Tapajos left Para for Rio de Janeiro and Santos, when proceeding under a reduced head of steam she struck a fog bank five miles southeast of Scotland Light, and nearly came upon an unknown three-masted schooner bearing down upon her through the fog. The Tapajos did not see her ahead, but too late to avoid a collision.

STOCK MARKET SHOWS DECLINE

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—In spite of the holiday the stock market in Wall street showed no signs of activity at the opening to-day and prices were dull and heavy. Practically all of the leading issues showed fractional declines. Reading was off ⅜, Southern Pacific ⅛, United States Steel ⅛, Pennsylvania ⅛, Amalgamated ⅝, and Union Pacific ¼. The curb market opened firm and moderately active. The cotton market was easier with September cotton off 16, October off 14, December off 20. The London American shares showed irregularity after a heavy opening, but got showed early declines and market leaders were all ¼ to ½ lower.

The Lincoln-Bailey monoplane which was to have been exhibited at the Harvard-Boston meet was damaged perhaps beyond repair, at Natick, a derrick which was moving it from the loft in which it was constructed giving way and dropping it thirty feet.

The monoplane was to have had its initial flight at a picnic at Sunnyside Park.

HAMILTON'S NEW MACHINE IS SPEEDY

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Sept. 6.—Charles K. Hamilton, the aviator, in the first trial in his new flying machine, "Hamiltonian," remained in the air at Agricultural Park for one minute and four seconds, covering a distance estimated at about two miles. He alighted with such speed as to slightly injure the machine.

ELSIE FERGUSON COMES TO HOLLIS AS STAR IN A NEW PLAY

"A Matter of Money," by Hubert Who Hides Identity, Hits Factory Greed.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

The latest turn of the drama, as directed by Henry B. Harris, puts the uplift sign on child labor and points a scornful finger at the capitalist who collects toll on the weary, killing grind of factory children.

It was put right up to you at the Hollis Street Theatre last evening in a way that made you think of the good old days of melodrama, when the villainous mill owner clinched his fingers around the throat of the beautiful shop girl. It was not all melodrama, by any means, and you felt the force of the sermon delivered by Mr. Harness they decline to tell his real name) in "A Matter of Money." But it was delicately acted by Miss Elsie Ferguson, who caught the spirit of factory life and made Rags a young woman to be reckoned with.

Quick to Touch Audience.

Miss Ferguson had every possible emotion right at her fingers' tips, and she played them intelligently. She touched her way from the whirring looms into the hearts of her audience long before the play's last whistle had rung down on the curtain.

Miss Ferguson was so much at home in the factory, and she made Rags such an appealing character, that the overstrained children of Howard Carten's mill that, in spite of her worthy clothes, you felt never doubt that she was the heroine of the play.

The unidentified author, Mr. Harness—marched the word side of the manufacturer across the stage several times—before even dragged the real villain into the story. Then he let him into his story to add its proper touch to the already bitter mood of the audience. He made children in filthy, disease-breeding factories.

Corporate greed was the keynote of his typewriter, and while in detail it did not always ring true, you realized that through the four acts without feeling the truth of his premise.

"Interests" Again Win.

It was such an easy step from the factory to the United States Senate that Alan Hubbard, mill owner's lawyer, and Senator-elect, that they discharged him. He gave a cop when they discharged him. He took the next train for Washington to become one of the senators from some-where. As a matter of natural sequence Hubbard followed on a later train to help win the fight against the employment of children under fourteen. As the product of Hubbard who was getting along exceedingly well, wearing tailor-made clothes and becoming modesty and a large measure of self-assurance.

The contest in the Senate came to the usual end of such affairs—the "interests" won and child labor seemed in a fair way of perpetuation. And one curtain was in fourth act—and the real skirmish gave Rags a full score. In the third act you were with her in the factory when Hubbard informed him that the entire Carten estate, save Rags, in her hand by the election of a cunning crime. He wasn't even excited, which only shows how accustomed to the villainy are in tremendous moments. "You've got to prove all this," he retorted to Hubbard. And Hubbard did, or there wouldn't have been a happy ending to the play.

Why a complicated note Hubbard established Rags—she was now Elizabeth, if you please—right in the entire Carten family, although in fact she was a Carten herself, though it wasn't good to boast about self, though it wasn't good to boast about Hubbard collected the girl and a volume of poetry, which seemed to satisfy him for the evening's task.

Miss Ferguson's conduct through the play was marked by a charm that established her at once with the audience. She was the heroine from the play on.

Frank Mills was a straightforward Hubbard, and Edward Ellis gave a bit of admirable touch of melodrama at admirable touch of melodrama at popular prices. Helen Macleod was Mrs. Carten, was as warm as chopped ice; and Carten, was as warm as chopped ice; and Edward See gave Wrenn that touch of some crisp humor.

Keith's.

Large audiences at B. F. Keith's Theatre at both performances yesterday greeted an excellent bill, the headliners of which are Rice & Prevost, the San Francisco impersonator of Irish characters. Rice is also, made his first appearance in Boston and made a decided hit. He appeared in "Girl Types," and in addition to the remarkable talent displayed in assuming the role of femininity he also made up as a very pretty girl. The last of these types he portrayed, "Cleopatra's Death Dance on the Evening of the Death of Mark Antony," was an excellent interpretation, with all of the Oriental gorgeousness.

Sam Chip and Mary Marble, always favorites in playhouses of this city, acquitted themselves still stronger in the role of theatregoers through their dialogue, "In Old Edam," which is replete with droll pathos and capital songs.

Eleanor Gordon and Theodore Pribus opened their second week with a new act, "Helen's Husband," and are received with such an open hand by the large audiences. With Harry Brown as a third member of the company, the sketch, which is adapted from the French, proved one of the most successful attractions for some time.

Clifford Walker, an English monologist, was well received, while Arthur Lessing was that of Amy Butler, supported by four good comedians, rendering clever dancing specialties.

The bill also included Ransone and Delilah, in a balancing act, the R. A. G. Trio in singing, banjo and piano playing, Lavin-Cameron Trio in a physical culture novelty, and Bowen, Lina and Moll in an exhibition on the bars.

Boston.

Staged under most admirable conditions, "The Round-Up," Edmund Day's great Western play is now on its fourth engagement in this city at the Boston Theatre. The immense stage of the Boston Theatre is remarkably well adapted for the extensive performance of the play. The wonderful battle scene in the waterless, sage-less desert, one of the greatest pieces of theatrical engineering ever produced, the general and ranch and the other scenes during the four acts of the play are presented with a vividness rarely witnessed.

The broad area of the stage makes the great battle scene, in which a real gatling gun is used, appear almost real, and the excellently trained supernumeries adds to the effect at the climax.

The company has changed the same as it was last year. Hapley Holmes as "Slim" Bowie, Joseph Selman as Sheriff Riverton, Ogden Crane as Buck McKee and Paula Bliss as Mrs. Riverton are the principals in the large management is exhibited all through the piece.

Shubert.

The coming of Frank Daniels is always marked with popularity and the delightfully funny comedian must have been particularly pleased by the greeting accorded his production of "The Belle of Brittany," an English musical comedy, at the Shubert Theatre yesterday.

This tiny bit of story set to some catchy music and presented in good performance in this city, it is by Leedham Bantock and J. J. Bernard, and staged by Howard Talbot and Mary Horne, and the lyrics by Percy Greenbank.

Mr. Daniels has a way of his own for producing laughs and his methods were the cause of the rare mirth of the Marquis de St. Gaudier, gives him plenty of opportunity to display the full extent of delivery, the postur ings and facial contor tions that have made him famous. The story pertains to an impoverished marquis who has borrowed a large sum from the local miller, giving his castle as security. The receipt is lost and the marquis repudiates the debt. He tries to marry his son to a rich ward, but the boy has a mind of his own and marries the daughter of the miller. The debt receipt finally turns up and the marquis is thwarted in every turn.

Mr. Daniels has an up-to-date song, "Women Get the Best of It," which made a hit at once. Miss Christine Nielsen as the miller's daughter, Babbette, had the verve of the large audience from the start, and her song, "Daffodil Time," brought several encores. The other members of the company also did well.

Tremont.

There may be numerous aviators at Atlantic, but "The Aviator"—a farce comedy in four acts, by James Montgomery—made its initial appearance in Boston at the Tremont Theatre to full capacity houses and meant success with a large audience. Some of the real hilarious, as a matter of fact, was supplied by one of the boxes and the searing monoplane that forms one of the parts of the comedy of course took their attention, for it brought realism to the scene.

Edward Nannary, who plays the author, Robert Street, kept the audience in roars of delight. Miss Ethel Everett gave a fine impersonation of Peggy, keep the proprieties right from the beginning. Little Miss Dawsey Montgomery also received attention in the way of applause for their efforts.

Globe.

A crowded house greeted Max Figman and his company of players in the opening production of "Mary Jane's Pa," Miss Edith Ellis's delightful comedy in three acts, at the Globe Theatre last night. It was under the direction of John Cort. The play runs through pathos, humor, politics and rural life, and holds the interest from start to finish.

Mr. Figman was at his best in the character of Hiram Merry. He was ably assisted by Miss Helen Lavay as Portia Perry, Miss Ida Murray, the darling of the gallery, cleverly given by little Dorothy McKay, Miss Josephine Drake, Robert Wayne, Raymond Walburn, Edward Chapman, Dorothy Phillips, Miss Dorothy Ward, Miss Hunter, C. O. Hunn, Helen Hartley, Charles Merriwell, Edwin Chapman, Jr., Mrs. McKay and Master Bergman.

The scene of the play is laid in Gosport, a village in Indiana. It tells the story of a vagabond husband, who leaves his family to wander over the country, but who finds his way back to his old home.

Castle Square.

Up in an airship went the audiences at the Castle Square Theatre when "The Circus Girl," assisted by the chorus, broke loose in an aeroplane song that told all about the joys and perils of aviation. The song was one of several new things in the musical comedy, which is the offering for the week of the John Craig stock company.

The aviation melody, appropriate to Boston as it was, made a big hit, and drew from the audience a new cry around Boston Light and back over the aviation field. In presenting the Craig players the musical offering is a three-ring show, with something doing every minute of the time. The Craig players have always been able to present very clever performances. They have played "The Circus Girl" before, and the new production this week is an exception in that it is even better than the previous Craig productions.

Winfred Young, Miss Gertrude Binley, Miss Mary Young, Donald Meek, George Russell, John Craig, Walter Walker, Bert Lytell, Miss Ruth Allen, Miss Ethel Intropidi, Miss Marie Curtis were the characters in the cast, to whom the audience accorded generous applause.

Grand Opera House.

The popular comedy "Checkers" opened the week at the Grand Opera House before a large audience. The scene is laid in Arkansas and is a story of love and horse racing. Harry D. Beaumont took the part of Checkers and played with much power and ease. Miss Mae Bliss Florence Boston who took the part of Pert, a sweet simple girl of ability. Marshall R. Stevens made a good impersonation of the gruff old gentleman, Colonel. The character work of Robert Craig was good. Dave Brahum, jr., was seen to his original role of "Push" Miller, the new track nut.

Orpheum.

A bill of exceptional excellence filled the Orpheum at the opening of the second week of popular-priced vaudeville and moving pictures yesterday.

Harry Le Clair, a female impersonator, headed the bill. A farce sketch, entitled "A Corner in Hair," by a company of four, headed by Harry Truesdale, and a ditty called "The General Salesman," given by Sadie Allen and company, were the other two headliners.

Grace Dellar made a hit with her funmaking. A blackface act by Al Herman, called "Pinochle and Poker," some clever acrobatic stunts by Mint and Wertz, a magic act by Ching Ling Chu Foo, a singing and dancing sketch by Inglis and Redding, and some funny bicycle riding by Lloyd, made up the remainder of the bill.

Boulevard.

A new programme of vaudeville was given at Gorman's Boulevard theatre in Medford yesterday. The list of entertainers was headed by Hilton and Lewis, in conversational comedy that caught the crowd. Six other ongoing numbers completed the bill.

Hub Theatre.

There was a great deal in the new bill at the Hub theatre yesterday that compended itself to playgoers, and there was little wonder at the size of the audiences.

Bowdoin Square.

Hart and Bartlett, in Irish comedy, had the last new entertainers at the Bowdoin Square theatre yesterday. Ethel Nevins, in Scotch songs, was also among the new faces on the bill.

Plays That Hold Over.

"The Climax" began a new week at the Park Theatre yesterday, playing to holding crowds. Few plays in a season meet with the popularity that has come to this interesting drama.

Although it has been at the Majestic Theatre for four weeks, "The Merry Widow" will doubtless equal all previous records in attendance during the remaining two weeks of its engagement here.

The final week of "My Man" at the Colonial Theatre was begun yesterday with two big audiences aroused to enthusiasm over the interesting play by Forrest Halsey.

Howard Athenaeum.

"The Merry Maidens," with Sam Rice and Miss Lilla Ormsbee, a South Boston young woman, came to the old Howard yesterday, and a very typical holiday audience and everybody was pleased. Two burlettas, "Bachelor Quarters" and "Mr. Bluebird," were splendidly acted, while the girls in the chorus came forward with many helpful antics and snappy songs. In the continuous part of the program the house presented a lively list of vaudeville features.

Gaiety Theatre.

"The Jersey Lillies" made good at the Gaiety Theatre yesterday, and Leon Erroll, who is featured with the organization, gave many indications of his right to stellar honors. The chorus was all that any one could desire.

Scenic Temple.

Two new shows were given at the Scenic Temple yesterday, in which some lively vaudeville numbers and new moving pictures were the feature. An incidental musical programme was furnished by Howe's Orchestra.

Bass Point.

Even the weather could not keep the crowds from visiting Bass Point yesterday. There were many attractions to engage the visitors, including splendid shore dinners and band concerts.

Paragon Park.

The closing days of Paragon Park were marked by the biggest attendance of the season. Manager Dodge made it a point to give a big show in every particular, and of course the Paragon Cafe was crowded at all hours on both Sunday and yesterday. Special music was also added much to the gaiety of the final days.

Norumbega Park.

The new vaudeville program at Norumbega Park yesterday was the kind that is long remembered. The bill was headed by Rose and Stevens, who were seen in a comedy sketch entitled "An Accidental Disaster." Several other attractive features were also added to the program.

Waldron's Casino.

There was no doubt about the quality of the entertainment at Waldron's Casino Theatre yesterday. "Queens of the Jardin de Paris" was the attraction and the musical shows can excel it in enlivening features. Not only was the burlesque timely and entertaining, but a spirited vaudeville bill was also given, which included the Orpheus Comedy Four.

Columbia Theatre.

"The Girls from Dixie" opened a week's engagement at the Columbia Theatre yesterday and gave two big audiences a great deal of solid fun. The leading funmakers were Adams and Drew, in different types of aeroplanes, 22 entries.

AMERICAN WANT "ADS" BRING QUICK RESULTS

HOW BIG IS BOSTON? CHANCE TO WIN $50

How big is Boston? Every one wants to know. What the census figures will show is something every one in Boston is thinking about now. The Boston American will give $50 in cash to those who make the nearest estimates to the population of Boston as shown by the census taken this year. Send your estimate to the Boston American. Fill in this coupon:

My estimate of the population of Bo ton is.....

Name .....

Address .....

Cut out this coupon when filled in and mail it to CONTEST EDITOR, BOSTON AMERICAN, P. O. Box, No. 227, Boston, Mass.

This is a splendid opportunity. Everyone is interested in the figures the census enumerators are giving out. Everyone who lives in Boston wants to know just how big this city has grown to be, how much it has increased in population in the past ten years.

The Boston American, that to stimulate the efforts of those who are thinking about this now, will give $50 in cash to those whose estimates come closest to the official figures the Census Bureau will give out, showing how great this city is. Men, women and children may compete. The prizes are to be awarded as follows:

Twenty-five dollars for the first best estimate.
Ten dollars for the second best estimate.
Five dollars for the third best estimate.
One dollar each for the next ten best estimates.

The population of Boston in 1905 was 595,683. This was 11 per cent. greater population than shown by the official census of 1900. Now if Boston has grown at the same rate for the past five years Boston is a city of 629,808 persons.

This, however, is but an estimate. One estimate until the real figures are made public is as good as another. The official figures may be far different from this estimate.

Now is the time to get busy and make out your estimates and send them to the CONTEST EDITOR, for the census enumerators are likely to issue their figures at any time now.

Shall We Do Without Sleep Some Day?

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

A half-developed being like man, hanging midway between primitive barbarism and ultimate perfection, should study the insect tribes which appear to have realized the possibilities of development in their line.

The study of the ant and the bee, the spider and the scorpion should fill us with hope. We should say to ourselves:

"If these tiny fragments of life can develop so highly, what may not WE hope for in the way of ultimate possibilities? Our beginning is so much more full of promise than the beginnings of our tiny insect brothers."

This writer, taking his own advice, which is most unusual, has been trying to get acquainted with some insects in the hope of cheering himself and getting new ideas.

From the female scorpion we acquire fresh veneration for the possibilities of maternal devotion.

The mother of the Gracchi has been well advertised because she preferred her sons to jewelry. The Russian mother who feeds herself to the wolves, instead of throwing her boy over the back of the sleigh in the usual way, is also highly praised. But their devotion shrinks to nothing when compared with that of any poor mother scorpion of Mexico's sandy tracts.

As soon as her young scorpions arrive, they climb to her back, half a hundred of them or more. She moves about with them, protecting them, avoiding danger, giving them the sunlight. Meanwhile they are feeding on her body. Her movements get gradually slower and slower; finally they cease. The young scorpions depart, leaving the mother scorpion simply an empty shell. We should dislike to see any such exhibition of tenderness among human beings, but we can't help admiring the scorpion.

Mr. Scorpion, placed as was Captain Dreyfus, would sting himself to death. They are a determined race.

Spiders who construct tiny balloons with little cars all complete are wonderful creatures. They cross chasms in their balloons, throwing out bits of trailing web which seem to act as rudders. In their little way and in a perfectly adequate fashion they have solved aerial navigation, which still puzzles us. We admire spiders and kill only those with yellow stomachs, which are "poison."

But up to the present we have found the ant the most interestingly suggestive creature. He has developed and understands stirpiculture—the improvement of the race by careful breeding—which with us is as yet mere theory, and as we look down at the ant, we look up to him because the strangely active creature manages to do without sleep.

We human beings drowse through thirty years of our threescore and ten, but the ant is awake and working all the time.

If the ant has managed to live without sleep, if he has acquired the faculty of lifelong wakefulness, why should we not do as much in time? We take it for granted that sleep is essential, as we take everything else for granted. We used to take it for granted that the earth was flat, but we have stopped that. Sleep was at one time forced upon man and other animals.

The earth in its rollings turned away from the sun once in every twenty-four hours. In the darkness of the beginning man said to himself: "If I go walking around, I shall fall into a hole, so I shall lie down and wait until the sun comes again."

He did as all the animals did before him for millions of years. Since that time man has conquered darkness. Why should he not ultimately conquer sleep?

We know that thin men, nervous, highly organized, do with far less sleep than others. We know that old age requires less sleep than youth.

Can we not cultivate and develop the characteristics which make sleep less necessary? Higher races of apes have abolished tails. Can't we abolish sleep?

As old age needs less sleep than babyhood, so in our maturity as a human race we shall probably demand less sleep than now in our racial babyhood. Perhaps none at all will be needed.

If that happens our lives will be doubled in value, they will be complete. The hours of sunlight will be devoted to examination and admiration of nature's beauties on this earth.

The hours of darkness, given up to sleep no longer, will be devoted to the study of space, to investigation among other worlds.

That kind of life will be worth while. Bear in mind that we shall only really live on this earth when we shall have settled all the little social and material questions here and shall have begun in earnest the study of the universe in which we are a speck.

The days of the future will be given up to artistic enjoyment of the beautiful. The nights will be devoted to intellectual development and research.

Man will LIVE.

Our Forest Fire Fighters

As a result of their heroic efforts in fighting the forest fires in the Northwest, forty employes of the Forest Service are in hospitals, suffering from injuries; many are dead and some have been blinded.

These injured men are obliged to pay their own expenses while in the hospital. Medical supplies the government furnishes, but surgical attendance and fees must come out of their own pockets.

The question of caring for the maimed men has been taken under advisement by the Department of Agriculture, but it is made clear that past injuries cannot be provided for.

It is to be hoped that the government will take speedy steps to meet such emergencies in the future. The men employed in the Forest Service are not the best paid in the world, and their work is lonely and exacting. They are expected to be willing to risk their lives at any moment, like the firemen of the cities. In spite of the fact that if maimed or blinded they run the chance of being sent to the poorhouse, they have not hesitated to do their full duty.

The Department of Agriculture should see to it at once that these men are cared for, and that in future some system shall be inaugurated whereby hospital treatment shall be provided free for foresters hurt in its service, and pensions granted those incapacitated through injuries received in the course of duty.

Inklings and Thinklings

By WEX JONES

MEN desiring to be in the fashion this Fall, says an eminent authority, must carefully avoid anything conspicuous. This announcement will come with a disagreeable shock to men who had contemplated wearing red golf jackets and green trousers during the Autumn months. Socks which display more than two of the primary colors are also under the ban, so it is hard to say what a poor young man is to do.

There seems to be a terrible lack of common-sense training in the fashionable girls' schools. Else, how are we to account for the sad muddle so many women are making of their smuggling lately? Is it possible this evidently essential feature of a girl's education is neglected entirely, or is the instruction perfunctory? It should be easy enough to smuggle such small objects as pearls, were the simplest precautions taken. There is a splendid opportunity just now for an experienced smuggler to set up a school of instruction for the rich.

And he could also make some side money by tipping off his pupils' probable methods to the customs men.

We thought better of St. Joe, Mo. The idea of cheering the mere President of the United States when "P" was present.

The census shows that Brooklyn flourishes like a green rubber plant.

It is a bad way to begin an anti-corset crusade by alluding to "woman's indisputable mental inferiority." There have been several disputes about it.

It has been suggested that a society of girl scouts should be formed on the lines of the great Boy Scouts organization. But what would a girl scout do on a rainy day when her hat was being ruined and the ungallant foe refused to defer his warfare until the sun came out? Or what could she do on a hurried scouting trip had she to wait until she fixed her hair? Anyway, lots of married men will tell you that women need no lessons in scouting. They discover anything they want to discover, and can ascertain without training the wheresbouts of a husband who may be skirmishing downtown.

His Pa Dreams He Is President

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I HAD a funny dreem last nite, Pa sed.

I dreemed that I was the president of the United States. That certainly was a funny dreem, Ma sed. President of the United States? Ha, Ha, sed Ma, you look purch more like a nite watchman.

Pa got kind of sour wen Ma sed that, but he dident want to have any quarl with her, because he had gave her his bankroll to keep wen he calm hoam in the nite beefour. Very well, my luv, sed Pa, perhaps you are right, perhaps I do look more like a nite watchman than I look like a president. Altho I must say, Pa sed, that is quite a compliment, beekaus with the exception of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson & Chester Arthur, our presidents havent been what you mite call handsome.

Did you ever stop to think, wife, sed Pa, what a plezer gallery mosst of our presidents wud make? I will not deny that they was grate & good men, espeshully Abraham Lincoln, the gratest man this country ever produced, but you know that Abraham's face looked like a map of the Appalachian Mountains, Pa sed, with a canyon in the middle of it for a mouth.

I know he was very homely, sed Ma. In fack, Ma sed, I was looking at his picter the day that you calm & proposed to me. I had gazed at his face so long that wen you calm in you seemed almost humsom. Then I married you, Ma sed, & after I had married you I happened to look at a picter of Jas. K. Hackett one day, & the horribel truth cuim hoam to me that you were not a good looking man. I will admit, Ma sed, that sum days you are better looking than other days, but taking you by & large, you ought to have your map survey'ed over.

You ought to be thankful that I am not a peach, sed Pa. Them humsom men is terribul cut-ups. Every way they turn there is brite blue & brown eyes twinkling at them, & they nite fall for them eyes, too, Pa sed, wile a nice hoamly man like I am is always sure to cum to his fireside after he has finished his days bookkeeping. I am thinking of riteing a poem sum day, Pa sed, called It Takes a Hoamly Man to Luv his Hoam. If I can git the right kind of muzick to it the song ought to go.

Well, sed Ma, getting back to the subjeck, what in the world do you suppose you wud do if you was the president of the United States?

Well, sed Pa, I will tell you, seeing that I have thought it all out. In the morning I wud arise erly & talk a lite breakfast, such as two silver dimes. Then I wud go out & do a lite[e] real work, after wich I wud talk a bath. You wud? sed Ma. Yes, sed Pa, I wud. Then I wud go down to the offis & sweep it out & then I wud set down & wat for the offis boys to cum to work.

What else wud you do wen you git to be president, sed Ma. Wud you give the ladies a chanst to vote?

I wud not, sed Pa. A man shud vote as his consclence dicktates, sed Pa, but nine times out of ten his wife is his conscience, & I think in that case one vote is a fawlty of two is enuff votes.

Next, sed Pa, I wud order a few actors & ballad writers to be executed, & then I wud reetire, with the thanks of a grateful peeopul ringing in my ears. I wud decline a second or third term, sed Pa.

The dumb waiter is ringing, sed Ma, so pay the leeman the ninety cents you owe him.
